He called it "A Day to Remember" August 20, 1981. "Dearest Nellie: Some memories—Some thoughts 51 years later. A happy, glorious day so long ago. A day when love was young—when hopes were bright. . . . These hopes and dreams were indeed beautiful to contemplate. . . . The dreams did not all come true. Disappointments sometimes left silent tears. A fit of temper, a failure to live up to those dreams, hopes and promises of long ago. Such failures do not mean a total failure, rather a need to recognize that perfection is perhaps impossible; happiness does not necessarily require perfection. Memories of Mary Jo, her husband, Art, our grandsons, Art Jr. and Joe, . . . Our friends who have perhaps unknowingly added to the treasures of a happy life. Now looking back, happy, shining days . . . and tolerance allows us to overlook those shortcomings which could destroy a marriage. Now, to look ahead with hope and confidence. . . . Our happiness is an inspiration to all who look and see, yes, who will join with us to maintain for all time a happy home filled with love and respect. Let us hope that our lives will be for others, as for us, a loving guide to all and perhaps guarantee that marriage will for others, as for us, thrive, grow and lead into a glorious, beautiful future."

Ah, yes, it comes time to wrap our thoughts in his teachings and apply them as we will. . . . God, in His infinite wisdom, gave us two promises and to you of the family, let me share these thoughts with you, briefly: The visions we have can stay with us if faith in God is kept alive—for faith transforms our thinking about both today and tomorrow. God's word in the scriptures to us is that of hope.

And secondly, God's promise to us is that of care—without limit. As the years pass we are more and more conscious of that care.

God doesn't shield us from every hurt nor smooth our way with ease—maybe because we need something on which to grow.

Though there are problems to solve and griefs to bear, God's word about caring for us is not an idle word. Any person of faith can look back and see the strength given and the prayers answered.

Joe Bottum used that as a springboard for his driving ahead; his effervescent personality. What a lesson for those of us! What a joy he was—we will miss him; but not the spirity, his Lifestyle.

Things that man did do, to make his record true. . . . To think, to love, to act honestly, to trust in God . . . And, single out his love and witness of his family . . . all five. Join me as we pray. . . .

DR. JOHN A. TALBOTT INSTALLED AS PRESIDENT OF AMERICAN PSYCHIATRIC ASSOCIATION

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am pleased and proud to note that the American Psychiatric Association, the Nation's oldest medical specialty society and one that now represents over 29,000 American psychiatrists, has recently installed a fellow New Yorker as its 113th president.

John A. Talbott, M.D., is not only a professor of psychiatry at Cornell University Medical College and associate medical director of the Payne Whitney Psychiatric Clinic in New York City, but is a concerned and dedicated professional, who has long championed the cause of a severely disadvantaged segment of our Nation's population—the chronically mentally ill. He has written widely about the challenges facing both American medicine and society at large in meeting the needs of this population, which too frequently we now see as the "street people" in our metropolitan centers. Some of you may recall Dr. Talbott as one of the first witnesses the Senate Finance Committee heard calling for change in the Social Security Disability Insurance Program—change necessary to safeguard the mentally disabled, and change which this body has approved.

In his maiden address as president of the APA, Dr. Talbott urged a continued and renewed focus upon the patient in future decisionmaking in the field of psychiatry, whether that decisionmaking is in the arena of public policy, clinical practice, training, or research. We, too should review our health care decisionmaking in terms of the needs of the ill, not just in terms of dollars and cents, and we should review our decisionmaking with a view toward meeting the health care and other needs of the chronically mentally ill and other medically underserved populations.

I urge my colleagues to read Dr. Talbott's remarks, and to consider how we can work together to achieve our shared goals of ensuring health care to our Nation's citizens—our patients, as Dr. Talbott calls them.

I ask that the text of Dr. Talbott's remarks be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

REMARKS OF DR. TALBOTT

At our 114th annual meeting in California twenty-six years ago this week, Harry C. Solomon, the 70th President of the American Psychiatric Association, called our large mental hospitals "antiquated, outmoded and . . . obsolete." He concluded that they were "bankrupt beyond remedy". He noted that a recent reduction in the census of such facilities had been coupled with a rise in the number of psychiatric wards in general hospitals, outpatient clinics, halfway houses, home care services, and day hospital and night hospital facilities; but cautioned that "liberalization of insurance plans" might encourage increased use of the new facilities by acutely ill patients rather than the chronically ill—necessitating the formation of homes or colonies for the chronically ill who were "less readily recoverable." Nevertheless, he urged us to "liquidate" "our large mental hospitals" "as rapidly as can be done in an orderly and progressive fashion" and move toward a two-tiered system of "community oriented intensive treatment" for the acutely ill and moderate-sized homes or colonies for the chronically disabled.

Now, in 1984, with the end of the century staring us in the face, we seem no closer to this Solomon's dream than he was. Our public facilities are deteriorating physically, clinically and economically; our chronically ill either transinstitutionalized to nursing homes or deinstitutionalized to our cities streets, lost in the vast army of the homeless; and our "liberal" insurance plans a thing of the past.

Psychiatry, so full of promise, so expectant of cure, so flush with excitement, just 26 years ago—now seems mired in a multiplicity of problems. It is these problems, that constitute our unfinished business for the remainder of the 20th century, that I wish to address today.

1. The fate of the public mental health system.—Harry Solomon's call for an end to the antiquated large mental hospital was not done in isolation—the World Health Organization, The Joint Commission on Mental Illness and Health, and lay and professional leaders throughout this nation, made similar suggestions. Ironically, while we have experienced the de-emphasis on the large state hospitals he anticipated we have seen neither any provision for funding the homes or colonies for "the less readily recoverable" chronically ill Solmon called for, nor have we witnessed any widespread implementation of an integrated community care system for the more "readily recoverable." In addition, while crippled and cracked, our state hospitals have not withered and blown away.

It is time we called for a reappraisal of the policy of depopulation of state hospitals without the concommitant provision of comprehensive treatment and care for the many who can return to the community and humane asylum and care for the few who cannot. It is time to face the facts that, as of now, we have no cure for dehabilitating psychotic illnesses, that not all schizophrenics are amenable to our current therapeutic armamentarium, that no community in America has an adequate number of array of psychiatric services, and that no fiscal ledgerdemain in the world can make our "system" cost-effective, so long as 297 state and county mental hospitals continue to consume the lionshare of money spent by our states nationwide.

2. Reimbursement for psychiatric services.—Solomon noted in 1958 the beginning liberalization of insurance plans to fund care for the mentally ill; currently over 98% of Americans are covered by either governmental or private health insurance plans. However, as we all know only too well, there are gigantic blotches in this seemingly rosy picture—first, coverage for the treatment of mental illness has always been less ample than for other medical illnesses, and second, fears of increasing health costs have prompted both government and business to suggest drastic measures for cutting costs.

From an economic standpoint, the list of measures enacted or proposed, reads like a bureaucrat's nightmare:

Cost-containment measures, such as caps on Medicaid, prospective payment mechanisms, and mandatory assignment of Medicare patients;

Insurance construction, through increased copayment, deductibles, and outright elimination of benefits;

Business coalitions formed with the express purpose of devising strategies to reduce health care costs of employees; and

Outright reduction of benefits, through increased claims review, demands for documentation, and administrative harrassment.

From a regulatory standpoint, the increased constraints are similarly restrictive:

Attention by the JCAH and other accreditating bodies to quantitative rather than qualitative or outcome measures;

Strangling regulation by an incredible number of governmental and "voluntary" agencies, which in New York State, number 164; and

A zealous effort by PSRO's and their competitors to disallow or "carve-out" patient days.

In addition, the practice of medicine is undergoing a radical shift, largely powered by economic forces:

Movement from solo to group or organized practice settings;

Competition from allied mental health professionals seeking parity of reimbursement, admitting privileges and licensure;

Competition from other medical specialists seeking payment of "cognitive treatment";

Introduction of "new" forms of practice, such as HMO's, IPA's and PPO's, designed to provide less expensive packages of care; and Increasing numbers of investor-owned psychiatric facilites.

Our response to these radical changes in the way we practice is more often characterized by anger at the bearer of the bad news of instrument of change than action aimed at correcting discrimination, poor quality care, or economically unsound proposals. When Margaret Heckler, Secretary of HHS, said in this city 5 months ago, that 10% of hospitals would close by the year 1990, and 5% of physicians be out or work, and when Governor Richard Lamm of Colorado, suggested at the APA's State Legislative Seminar 3 months ago; that America's reindustrialization depended on reducing medicine's share of the economic pie—we can appreciate that the problem is bigger than psychiatry alone.

But it is self-defeating to complain and bemoan the loss of the good old days, to blame the bearer of the bad news, or to act as if there were no abuses, problems, or substance to the charges of over-spending. If we are to ensure our patients' future, we must lay aside our misguided notions that benign legislators will do what we want merely because of our medical degrees, that the public on their own will fight for mental health benefits, and that the introduciton of money, advocacy efforts and old fashioned politics are unbecoming scientist-physicians. We must spend time—getting to know our state and federal legislators, being available to their staffs to discuss pending legislation, journeying to our capitols to testify on bills, and agreeing to appear on television or speak on the record to representatives of the print media.

We are this profession's most precious resource, and we must be willing to spend a sizable amount of our professional time in what I call legislative-lobbying overhead—if we are to survive and our patients are to receive the care they so desperately need.

3. The destigmatization of mental illness.—Since time immemorial, the mentally ill have been ridiculed, discriminated against, and stigmatized. While alcoholism is now accepted as a "medical disease", and mental retardation, a "physical affliction", the mentally ill are still considered by many to be responsible for their illnesses and penalized for them. Efforts have been made over the years to destigmatize mental illness, but in my opinion, these have been grossly amateurish.

What we need is a serious, concerted and professional effort to educate the public about the prevalence of serious and chronic mental illnesses, about the necessity of funding research into the epidemiology, etiology, prevention and treatment of these illnesses; and about the limitations and efficacy of psychosocial and biological treatments. It would certainly help to have a prominent public figure, like Jerry Lewis or Will Rogers, take the lead. In addition, we need the support and advocacy of relatives of the mentally ill, who, for too long a time, have been blamed by us for the afflictions of their family members. Finally, and most difficult, we need the support of articulate patients and expatients, just as kidney transplant surgeon and burn-unit physicians have.

As a coda, let me suggest that our inability to look anything but ridiculous in the celebrated courtroom "battles of the experts," over the existence of mental illness or lack of it in criminal suspects, makes the process of destigmatization of our patients all the more difficult. This Association must find some way to protect the seriously ill from being punished for acts committed while incomprehensibly psychotic, while eliminating the spectacles that occur all too frequently between our so-called forensic experts, that tarnish all of us and our patients.

4. Reexamining our exploitative treatment of foreign medical graduates.—For years, public mental hospitals and substandard residency programs have utilized FMG's because they could not attract qualified American medical graduates. The psychiatric training, cultural education, language preparation and professional socialization of most FMG's has been second-class in addition, they perform more clinical service than they are rewarded for educationally. Although over ⅓rd of the candidates for the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology are FMG's, their failure rate is 8 times that of AMG's; although ¼ of our members are FMG's, only a few serve on committees, in the Assembly, or on the Board; and although our President himself is a foreign medical graduate, he is the first in the 140 year of this Association.

We can no longer continue to encourage the importation of FMG's as cheap labor for the public facilities, we can no longer continue to offer those now in the country such substandard cultural, linguistic, and didactic experiences, and we can no longer countenance the gap between those graduate psychiatrists who are foreign born and those who are not.

5. Determining and ensuring the most effective and highest quality care for each patient.—Throughout psychiatry's relatively short history, enthusiasm and personal conviction have frequently determined what patient receives which treatment in what setting. Only recently have we begun to look at differential therapeutics with a scientific eye. To some extent, our current outcome research is prompted by the same cost considerations I enumerated above—but as a profession we must investigate these questions primarily out of a commitment to provide the most appropriate treatment, of the highest quality, for each individual person.

While awaiting the results of all the important investigations into the etiology of mental illnesses, the critical research questions that should occupy us for the remainder of this century include:

What treatment works for which patients in what settings?

What is the best system of care for the mentally ill? and

How do we ensure the provision of the most appropriate treatment and care for each individual?

6. Unification of psychiatry as a medical specialty.—In a related vein, as we all know only too well, psychiatrists have grown, not only in numbers, but in the diversity of the treatment modalities they employ and the settings in which they work. This represents a significant component of both our strength and our weakness. For, while the multiplicity of orientations, subspecialties, and treatment settings, has, as our President just pointed out, given us a rich dynamic mosaic—the feelings of competition, antagonism and perceived favoritism that arise, hinder the solid sense of identity as psychiatrists, that we all should feel, first and foremost.

Further, as I have travelled around the country, I have been concerned that almost every subgroup of psychiatrists feels underrepresented and underappreciated by official psychiatry and/or underpaid in relation to some other subgroup. The list is long and includes state commissioners of mental health, general hospital psychiatrists, VA psychiatrists, HMO psychiatrists, military psychiatrists, psychoanalysts, psychoanalytically-oriented psychotherapists, family therapists, child psychiatrists, state hospital psychiatrists, foreign medical graduates, Blacks, women, gays, Hispanics, psychosocially-oriented researchers, and psychiatric administrators.

Finally, I have been sensitized to the pervasive sense of uneasiness of many of our members, that, as our scientific frontiers expand so rapidly in exciting directions, they will become distant from and irrelevant to our clinical core. This concern is not merely about a split between those interested in biological versus psychological etiologies and treatments. Rather, it is expressed as a hope that we continue to be able to integrate all parts of our rapidly-moving field into the central core of our thinking and practice. I think this is one of the most intriguing challenges we face in the next 15 years.

As an addendum, let me reemphasize that our relationship to the rest of medicine and organized medicine is at a critical phase. Through the hard work of thousands of our members, at national, state and local levels, we are once again being seen as "real doctors", who are interested in not only our own specialty and subspecialties, but in the problems, challenges and actions of all our medical colleagues. Our continuing reintegration into medicine must proceed vigorously.

7. A word about organized psychiatry as a guild.—Lastly, I would like to focus on our very real concerns as members of a profession on those issues commonly referred to as guild issues, defined in Webster's Dictionary as issues of mutual aid and protection.

Psychiatry, along with the rest of medicine, can thrive only so long as it maintains the public's trust. That trust, in our case, is frequently shaped by events and developments we may have little or no control over, but some over which we do. Whether we like it or not, our social status, our income level, and our public image as an ethical profession, depends less on our therapeutic effectiveness, individual integrity, and scientific knowledge, than on publically-visible problems such as deinstitutionalization, homelessness, sexual abuse of patients, criminal acts by patients, and the psychiatric underservice of the poor, minorities, severely and chronically ill, etc.

Make no mistake. Your organization and elected officers can only advocate for your economic and professional well being if we are willing to take on and attempt to redress these public concerns. In addition, we will only have the public credibility if our primary concern is the well-being of our patients, not ourselves. To that end, our need, indeed our dependence, on healing the schism between ourselves and the relatives of the mentally ill, is critical. No insurance company or mental health program will adequately fund or reimburse services anymore based on our word alone—we need allies, coalitions and friends.

The focus on the patient.—As many of you know by now, my primary goal as President will be to focus attention on the patients we have the responsibility for treating. It is my conviction that whether we are talking about:

Public policy decisions, such as deinstitutionalization or the insanity defense;

Clinical decisions, such as when and how long to treat persons in outpatient or inpatient care;

Research questions, about etiology, treatment and rehabilitation; or

Training issues, such as what is the optimal balance between long-term psychotherapy experience and psychopharmacology exposure, or how much time should be spent in a psychiatric vs. general hospital vs. community program.

We will only be able to address the issues appropriately, if we start with the patient, and then derive our research questions, educational curriculae, clinical strategies, regulatory processes, and public policy initiatives.

If we start with the patient, that is where we will also end up. As a means of emphasizing this focus, I have decided that the theme of the 1985 Annual Meeting in Dallas, Texas will be "Our Patients." For the remainder of this week, I look forward to illuminating myself in the reflected light of the great dynamic mosaic George Tarjan has described. For the next 15 years, I expect we as a profession will try to settle the issues I've spoken about today. But as a starting point, for the next year, I hope you and I will concentrate our attention on the ultimate purpose of all our work, whether clinical, administrative, research or teaching: Our Patients.

Thank you.●

NATIONAL CHAMPIONS

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, a 50-year drought has been broken in South Dakota—not by Mother Nature which regularly intervenes to correct cyclical insufficiency of moisture—but by two Huron, SD, high school students who returned the championship of the National Forensics League Debate tournament to our State for the first time in 50 years.

The achievements of Mike Cole and Steve O'Brien in national competition have brought great distinction not only to themselves and their school, but their community, indeed, all South Dakota. Playing a vital role in their accomplishment was their coach, Jack Holmquest.

It is a pleasure for me to join in the salute to these fine young people, and I commend to the attention of my colleagues a report on how their teamwork, hard work, and persuasion earned them the national debate title, and ask it be printed in the RECORD.

The report follows:

HURON DEBATERS WIN NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP BY "EARNING IT"

(By Roger Kasa)

Before it began, Coach Jack Holmquest says he was told by several fellow debate coaches that his team deserved to win the National Forensics League Debate Tournament held last week in San Antonio, Texas.

But Holmquest said he didn't think anyone deserved to win a championship, "it's something you have to earn."

And that's exactly what the team of Mike Cole and Steve O'Brien did. They came out of nowhere to win the national championship after 11 rounds and five days of debate.

For South Dakota it was the end of a 50-year drought. Not since 1934 when Sioux Falls Washington turned the trick has a state team won the national title.

Both Cole and O'Brien said they had thought about the national tournament during the year, "but it was in a joking manner."

Neither one of them thought they had a chance to achieve national prominence when they left Huron for San Antonio.

Prior to the start of the tourney, the favorite was Bronx Academy of Science of New York.

"They took second last year and travel the national circuit during the season debating many of the top teams," said Holmquest.

He said the school gives them a $10,000 annual budget and "the students go out and raise $80,000 to supplement that."

But the New York team was eliminated in four rounds.

Five rounds later—in the ninth round—Cole and O'Brien suffered their lone defeat in the double elimination tournament. That came at the hands of Montgomery Bell Academy of Tennessee. But the Huron twosome rebounded in the 10th round to eliminate Lakeland, N.Y., another team that was highly favored to win the national title.

That set the stage for the final round—against Houston, Texas—a team that Huron had defeated earlier.

"They stayed up most of the night redoing their presentation," Holmquest said.

"We had talked to a number of kids who had debated them and we had a pretty good idea of what they would do," O'Brien said.

During the championship round, both O'Brien and Cole felt they had a chance to win the national championship shortly after the Houston team had finished its first negative speech.

"We still had to act reserved and not get overconfident," O'Brien said. "During any round you can't look nervous. If you get nervous the arguments won't come out right . . . you'll stumble over the words."

Added Holmquest: "And the people won't believe you either."

Holmquest said he thought Cole and O'Brien could win the national title three different times.

The first came when the Huron team had completed three days of competition as the lone undefeated team, he said. "But that rumor proved not to be true as there was another team also undefeated," he said.

He said the second time thoughts of a national championship passed through his mind when Huron had ousted Lakeland in the semifinals.

And the last time was after the championship round, he said. "The coaches all told us they thought we had won it," he said, but it was a long three-hour wait before the results were finally announced.

How did they accomplish it?

"The judges liked our way of doing things," Holmquest said. "A debater who sounds like a persuasive person and not a computer. These two guys had a lot of knowledge and it was realistic."

Said O'Brien: "We kept the real world in our debates. Our opponents used examples that could happen in theory but not in reality."

"The other coaches said they were so well prepared," Holmquest said. "Some of their opponents threw up their hands early in the rounds and said 'we can't beat them.'"

Holmquest said O'Brien and Cole have worked all year doing research on the subject: "Should the U.S. establish uniform rules governing the procedure in all criminal courts in the nation."

"Their research was very disciplined and very intelligent," Holmquest said. "Combine that with a persuasive delivery and you've got a winning ticket."

Holmquest, who has coached Huron High School debate for 11 years, said he's had other debaters just as good as Cole and O'Brien, "but no team as complete."

"By that I mean their teamwork and talent and knowledge rose to the top at a time when I could help them," he said.

Holmquest said the accomplishments of Cole and O'Brien also are a tribute to South Dakota and Huron.

"This state's debate system—from Brookings to Watertown to Sioux Falls—helped produce this championship," Holmquest said. "They were real trials for these guys and gave them a lot of close rounds."

And Holmquest also said the support from the community and school "is extremely important."

O'Brien and Cole qualified for the national tournament by winning the state NFL team title—Huron's first since 1961. O'Brien also won the state men's extemporaneous contest and Cole finished second.

Holmquest, who is enjoying his finest year as a high school debate coach, was selected South Dakota Debate Coach of the Year this year.

However, no such award is given on the national level, but Cole said "if there was one, Jack would win it."

To Holmquest, Cole's compliment probably means more than any kind of an award.●

TRIBUTE TO JACK MERWIN, RETIRING SECRETARY OF THE SOUTH DAKOTA GAME, FISH, AND PARKS DEPARTMENT

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I should like to take a few moments to pay special tribute to Mr. Jack Merwin, secretary of the South Dakota Game, Fish, and Parks Department. Jack recently announced that he would step down from his post effective August 1, after serving three Governors of both parties with distinction over the past 7½ years.

While I and many of Jack's many friends and supporters are disappointed at his decision, we take special heart in the fact that he will remain with the department on a public relations level.

There are often no more difficult issues than those that involve the proper use and management of our natural resources and protection of our wildlife. South Dakota is a leader in outdoor recreation, hunting and fishing, because of the dedicated and farsighted programs which Jack Merwin brought to fruition during his tenure.

We have expanded our fish production, increased our game populations and protected our wetlands in a responsible manner under Jack Merwin's able leadership. Jack is rightfully proud of the Missouri River recreation development plan, which created a unique State and Federal relationship for the development of recreation, fishing and boating areas along the Missouri River.

Jack, came to South Dakota after serving 20 years in the U.S. Air Force, achieving the rank of master sergeant. He served as the outdoor editor for the Watertown Public Opinion in Watertown, SD, for 4 years until he became public information specialist with the game, fish, and parks department in 1970. In 1974, he was promoted to chief public affairs officer of the department. In 1977, then-Governor Richard Kneip appointed Jack as secretary, where he has served with distinction ever since.

In his duties as secretary, Jack believed strongly in public participation. He traveled across South Dakota in an effort to bring more public attention to the need for strong public input in making sound department decisions which affected recreation, game, and fishing programs. He built a strong network of hunters, anglers, environmentalists, and preservationists working together for the common good of South Dakota. They provided the vital support which allowed him to move forward to advance new policies and build new facilities.

As a reward for his efforts, Jack received many awards of distinction. Foremost among these are the Conservation Communicator of the Year Award from the South Dakota Wildlife Federation and the Conservationist of the Year award by the South Dakota Chapter of the Wildlife Society. In 1983, he was the recipient of the Wildlife Conservation Law Enforcement Achievement Award, presented by the Shikar-Safari International, for his efforts to apprehend and convict poachers taking illegal game in the Black Hills. The conviction of 23 individuals stands as strong testament to his commitment to sound wildlife management and protection policies.

While we will greatly miss his more visible profile as secretary of the South Dakota Game, Fish, and Parks Department. South Dakotans are pleased that Jack Merwin will remain available and eager to continue his long history of effective and tireless service to our State.

Mr. President, I should like to include in the RECORD a copy of a recent editorial which appeared in the Mitchell Republic (Mitchell, SD) expressing appreciation for Jack's service to our State.

The editorial follows:

MERWIN FURTHERED OUTDOOR CAUSE

Evidence of the impact Jack Merwin has had on South Dakota's outdoors is visible practically everywhere in the state.

From expanded deer herds in the western region to a more stable pheasant population in the east, from increased awareness of the necessity for conscientious fish-stocking efforts to an ambitious development project along the Missouri River, he has left a positive mark on this state.

South Dakotans need no one to remind them how important the outdoors, and the wildlife it supports, are to the welfare of our state. In addition to obvious recreational benefits, our economy in general is closely entwined with the deer that dart through our wooded areas, the walleye whose presence in our waters make ours a fishing mecca, and the pheasants whose flights are so much a part of state folklore.

Merwin, stepping down Aug. 1 after 7½ years as secretary of the State Game, Fish, and Parks Department, did not wave a magic wand and immediately conjure up results. Rather it took marathon hours, intelligent foresight, and tireless help from a cast of hundreds within the GF&P force.

Today the condition of South Dakota wildlife is good. Healthy populations of most game animals are an indication that much has been done right by those in charge.

Merwin, 51 still has a lot to offer to our state. He will remain active in the department with his primary duties centering on public relations and project development.

Citing the need for a change, Merwin leaves a post he served unselfishly. To see the good accomplished under his leadership, you need only take a leisurely stroll some afternoon through our outdoors.●

TENNESSEE'S JOHN BRAGG: NEW NCSL PRESIDENT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I congratulate State Representative John Bragg, the deputy speaker of the Tennessee House, on his formal election as the president of the National Conference of State Legislatures scheduled for the 10th annual meeting of the NCSL July 23 through 27, 1984 in Boston, MA.

John Bragg will begin his tenure in this national office on December 1, 1984. His presidency launches a new decade of achievement for the National Conference of State Legislatures, which was founded in 1975. Representative Bragg has been one of the chief architects of the organization. The NCSL seeks to improve the quality and effectiveness of State legislatures, foster interstate communication and cooperation, and assure the States a strong, cohesive voice in the federal system.

John Bragg has, as a member of NCSL, emphasized the role of the legislative branch of the Government in controlling the public purse strings. He now chairs the NCSL Budget Committee and, several years ago, he initiated the NCSL Task Force on Pension Reform.

Representative Bragg, who has chaired the House Finance, Ways and Means Committee for the Tennessee General Assembly since 1973 is known as the "fiscal watchdog" of our State. He authored legislation that created annual sessions of the legislature, the Fiscal Review Committee, the Sunshine law, and other bills strengthening the accountability procedures in State and local government.

The Congress should applaud John Bragg's brand of fiscal repsonsibility at the State level of government. In 1983, State and local governments were accountable for spending $93 billion Federal grant dollars for the benefit of American citizens. The Federal Government depends greatly on State governments to monitor these expenditures to see that they are disbursed in accordance with the law and agency regulations. State legislatures are increasingly taking a strong role in this monitoring process. Responsible, fiscally knowledgeable legislators like John Bragg are key to the success of our intergovernmental fiscal system.

A nationally recognized expert on pension policy and pension reform, John was a member of the Presidential Commission on Pension Policy from 1979 through 1981. In fact, the talents of this distinguished member of the Tennessee legislature have been recognized at the national level for many years. He has taken a leadership role in the Southern Legislative Conference and the Council of State Governments in addition to his work with the NCSL.

So, I congratulate John Bragg as he takes over the top office of the National Conference of State Legislatures. As the ranking member of the Senate Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee and a three-term member of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, I look forward to continuing to work with Representative Bragg in his new office with the National Conference of State Legislatures. He has long been my friend and trusted counselor on matters of interest to State governments.●

TRIBUTE TO RABBI EDGAR MAGNIN

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today in tribute to a great man whose recent passing has saddened myself and thousands of others in my home State of California, and indeed throughout the Nation. I am speaking of Rabbi Edgar Magnin.

The death of any man diminishes every man. But when his life is as rich and his legacy is as profound as Rabbi Edgar Magnin's, the sense of loss is mingled with a feeling of gratitude. "One must wait until the evening," said the Greek dramatist Sophocles, "to see how splendid the day has been." In the case of Rabbi Magnin, the splendor was visible to all long before he left us. For nearly 70 years, he embodied the talmudic teaching that ancient inheritances can have modern applications. His was a universal faith, clothed in goodness and steeped in humanist values. No one could cross his path without savoring his wit or benefiting from his perspective.

Hating pretense as much as he loved his God, Edgar Magnin prayed at the White House and lectured at the University of Southern California. He wrote newspaper columns and did radio shows. He counted among his personal friends Roman Catholic Cardinals, film stars, literary figures, and the towering intellect of our time, Albert Einstein. He accumulated honorary degrees with the steadiness of the seasons.

Yet this good man will be remembered, not for whom he knew, but for what he was. He will be remembered for having strolled into a Los Angeles Red Cross office on December 7, 1941, to "see if I could help with the phones" as he put it. He will be remembered for his contributions to the civic life of this State and city, and for his unwavering support of democratic Israel. He never forgot what a blessing it was to live in America, where devotion and dissent are both protected. All who were privileged to come within the sound of his voice know how deeply he cherished these freedoms. And so, for as long as people gather to worship in the domed temple on Wilshire Boulevard, a local landmark and the symbol in stone and stained glass of global, timeless faith, Rabbi Magnin will be remembered—not in the sorrow of this hour, but in the triumph of his 94-year relationship with God, and the community he nurtured.

I extend my condolences to his widow, Evelyn, his children, Henry and Mae, and a family for whom his memory must be a priceless heritage.●

MEDAL OF FREEDOM TO HENRY JACKSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on the 26th of June, in a moving and memorable ceremony in the Rose Garden, President Reagan presented the Presidential Medal of Freedom posthumously to our beloved former colleague, Henry M. Jackson.

Mr. President, the Medal of Freedom was established by President Kennedy in 1963 to be the highest civil honor awarded by the United States for services in peacetime and wartime, and was named the Presidential Medal of Freedom for that purpose.

As it happens, the first person to receive the medal posthumously was President Kennedy himself. He made the first awards on the 4th of January, 1963. He had planned to award several more in December 1963. His assassination intervened but the ceremony was duly held nevertheless. President Johnson made the first posthumous award of the Medal of Freedom to John F. Kennedy.

This history comes to mind because of the recent award to Henry M. Jackson. He and John Kennedy were the closest friends and colleagues for many years in the U.S. Senate. Henry Jackson, who might have served as Vice President under President Kennedy, stepped aside from that candidacy that he might make way for then Senator Lyndon B. Johnson. Henry Jackson assumed the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee, from which position he led that memorable and successful campaign.

Mr. President, all of us in this body will wish to express our appreciation to President Reagan for the graciousness of his remarks on the occasion of this award, and for the large-spirited manner in which he chose to make this presentation.

I ask unanimous consent that the remarks of the President on that occasion be included in the RECORD at this point, along with the moving and felicitous response of Helen Jackson on behalf of herself, of Anna Marie, and of Peter.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT AT POSTHUMOUS PRESENTATION OF THE MEDAL OF FREEDOM TO HENRY JACKSON

THE ROSE GARDEN, JUNE 26, 1984

The PRESIDENT. Ladies and gentlemen, honored guests and Mrs. Helen Jackson—thank, all of you, for coming here today. Won't you please be seated.

We're here to honor Henry "Scoop" Jackson who was one of the great senators in our history and a great patriot who loved freedom first, last and always.

It's less than a year since his death, but already we can define with confidence the lasting nature of his contribution. Henry Jackson was a protector of the nation, a protector of its freedoms and values. There are always a few such people in each generation. Let others push each chic new belief or become distracted by the fashionable reading of history. The protectors listen and nod and go about seeing to it that the ideals that shaped this nation are allowed to survive and flourish. They defend the permanent against the merely prevalent. They have few illusions.

Henry Jackson understood that there is great good in the world, and great evil, too, that there are saints and sinners among us. He had no illusions about totalitarians, but his understanding of the existence of evil didn't sour or dishearten him. He had a great hope and great faith in America. He felt we could do anything. He like to quote Teddy Roosevelt: "We see across the dangers the great future, and we rejoice as a giant refreshed . . . the great victories are yet to be won, the greatest deeds yet to be done."

Scoop came to the Congress in 1941, a year when the locomotive of history seemed wrenched from its tracks. In Europe, the ideals of the West were under siege; in America, isolationists warned against involvement. Scoop watched history unfold. He watched Norway, the country of his immigrant parents, fall to Hitler. He came to [some] conclusions about the world. And from then until the day he died, he rejected isolationism as an acceptable way for a great democracy to comport itself in the world. This view sprang from the heart of the FDR tradition of foreign policy. We accept our responsibilities in the world; we do not flee them.

Henry Jackson absorbed within himself the three great strains of thought that go to the making of a noble foreign policy: the love of freedom, a will to defend it and the knowledge that America could not and must not attempt to float along alone; a blissful island of democracy in a sea of totalitarianism.

Scoop Jackson was convinced that there's no place for partisanship in foreign and defense policy. He used to say, "In matters of national security, the best politics is no politics." His sense of bipartisanship was not only natural and complete—it was courageous. He wanted to be president, but I think he must have known that his outspoken ideas on the security of the nation would deprive him of the chance to be his party's nominee in 1972 and 1976. Still, he would not cut his convictions to fit the prevailing style.

I am deeply proud—as he would have been—to have Jackson Democrats serve in my administration. I am proud that some of them have found a home here.

Scoop Jackson believed in a strong defense for only one reason: because it would help preserve the peace by deterring military violence.

He believed in arms control because he wanted a more secure world. But he refused to support any arms control initiative that would not, in his judgment, serve the security interests of the nation and ensure the survival of the West. His command of the fact and his ability to grasp detail were legendary. At Congressional hearings, people often learned more from his questions than they did from anyone else's answers.

And, it was very much like Scoop to see that there was a growing problem in Central America—and to see that the challenge of protecting freedom and independence there would require the commitment of Democrats and Republicans alike. He conceived the Bipartisan Commission on Central America and became one of its most active leaders.

He knew that stable, democratic institutions cannot be achieved in that region without the security that American assistance can provide. He saw the Commission's work [under way], and, if he were alive today, he would be working tirelessly to get its recommendations accepted by the Congress.

Scoop helped shape national policy on dozens of complex issues—on strategic planning and arms control, on the Soviet Unions and Central America, on human rights, and Israel, and the cause of Soviet Jewry.

His support for Israel grew out of his knowledge that political decisions must spring from moral convictions. It wasn't some grand geopolitical abstraction that made him back the creation of Israel; it was seeing the concentration camps first hand at the end of the war. At Buchenwald he saw the evil, as he said, "written on the sky"— and he never forgot.

He said the Jews of Europe must have a homeland. He did everything he could to strengthen the alliance between the United States and Israel, recognizing that we are two great democracies, two great cultures, standing together. Today both nations are safer because of his efforts.

He never stopped speaking out against anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. And he was never afraid to speak out against anti-Semitism at home. And he—Scoop Jackson just would not be bullied.

He conceived and fought for the Jackson Amendment to the Trade Act of 1974. There's hardly a soul among the hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews who later found freedom in the West who was not sustained in the struggle to emigrate by the certain knowledge that Scoop was at his side.

Scoop was always at the side of the weak and forgotten. With some people, all you have to do to win their friendship is to be strong and powerful. With Scoop, all you had to do was be vulnerable and alone. And so when Simas Kudirka was in jail in Moscow it was Scoop who helped mobilize the Congress to demand his release.

When Baptists in the Soviet Union were persecuted, it was Scoop who went again and again to the floor of the Senate to plead their cause. When free trade unionists were under attack in Poland, Scoop worked with the American Labor Movement to help them.

A few years ago, he was invited to visit the Soviet Union. The invitation was withdrawn when he said he could not go without calling on Andrei Sakharov. If Scoop were here today, I know he would speak out on behalf of Sakharov—just as Sakharov, a man of immense courage and humanity, stood up in Moscow and hailed the Jackson Amendment as a triumph of "the freedom loving tradition of the American people."

Scoop Jackson was a serious man. Not somber, or self-important, but steady and solemn. He didn't think much of the cosmetics of politics. He wasn't interested in image. He was a practitioner of the art of politics, and he was a personage in the affairs of the world. But there was no cause too great or too small for his attention.

When he wasn't on the floor of the Senate, or talking to the leaders of the world, he was usually in his office on the phone—consoling a constituent in a moment of grief, tracking down a lost social security check, congratulating an honor student, or helping a small businessman who was caught up in red tape.

The principles which guided his public life guided his private life. By the time he died, dozens of young men and women had been helped through school by a scholarship fund that he established and sustained. No one knew the money came from Scoop, until a change in the financial disclosure laws many years later forced him to 'fess up. He had never told the voters; he'd never even told his own staff.

Other people were embarrassed when the disclosure laws revealed their vanities. Scoop was embarrassed when it revealed his virtues.

One night last September, Scoop worked a long day and went home with a cold. There he fell into the sleep from which he never emerged. The next day, it was as if Washington had changed. Something was missing, some big presence.

A few days later, in a eulogy for Scoop, it was pointed out that there's a room in the Senate where members of the public are greeted. And on the walls of that room are the portraits of five of the greatest U.S. Senators, men chosen by the members of the Senate to reflect the best that chamber ever knew. There's Robert Taft, who, like Scoop, was Mr. Integrity, and LaFollette, who, like Scoop, often swam against the tide. There's Calhoun, who loved the South as Scoop loved the West, and Webster, who tried, like Scoop, to be a force to hold the nation together, in spite of its differences. And there's Henry Clay, a gifted man, who, like Scoop, would have been a great President.

It happens that there is no appropriate space on the walls of that room for another portrait.

So I'm joining those who would suggest to the Majority Leader that the Senate make room and commission a portrait so that Scoop Jackson can be with his peers. And when it's all done and in place, I'd be very proud to be among those who would go to the Senate and unveil it, Republicans and Democrats alike, a bipartisan effort in memory of the great bipartisan patriot of our time.

And, now, I am deeply honored to present to you, Mrs. Helen Jackson, the Medal of Freedom in honor of your husband, Senator Henry Jackson of the State of Washington.

Let me read the citation: "Representative and Senator for more than four decades, Henry Martin Jackson was one of the greatest lawmakers of our century. He helped to build the community of democracies and worked tirelessly to keep it vigorous and secure. He pioneered in the preservation of the nation's natural heritage, and he embodied integrity and decency in the profession of politics. For those who make freedom their cause, Henry Jackson will always inspire honor, courage and hope." (Applause.)

Mrs. JACKSON: Mr. President, I'm proud to accept this great honor the nation has bestowed on my husband.

I accept this award not only on behalf of Anna Marie, Peter and myself, but also on behalf of all of those who worked with Scoop and shared his causes and convictions over the years.

As Scoop used to say, "If you believe in the cause of freedom, then proclaim it, live it and protect it, for humanity's future depends upon it."

Mr. President, we thank you for today from the bottom of our hearts. (Applause.)

DEATH OF GEORGE M. LOW

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on the 17th of July, the United States lost one of the great public servants of this age. His name was little known outside his own profession, though his life's work is known to all.

I refer, of course, to George M. Low, who headed the Apollo space project. In his characteristically graceful and bemused manner, he would frequently say that what astronauts ate for breakfast was really of greater interest to the public than what he did. But of course what he did made it possible for the astronauts to do what they did. For George Low was one of the great engineers of this age. It might responsibly be stated, Mr. President, that he was the greatest engineer of any age, for what could be a greater engineering feat than to send a man to the Moon and return him safely? Fifteen years and a day after launching men to the Moon, George Low died in Troy, NY.

It is frequently supposed that this was an achievement of science. It certainly was that in the sense that generations of scientific inquiry and discovery had brought us to the state of knowledge where we could responsibly undertake to send a man to the Moon and bring him back safely.

George Low was the kind of man who could apply that knowledge to the achievement of the theoretically possible.

George Low was one of the engineers who prepared the memorandum for President Kennedy that said this could be done in the course of the 1960's, and, accordingly, ought to be tried.

The actual effort—the construction of the rockets, the control systems, the space craft, the space suits—was the work of engineers, and I think possibly could be described as the greatest engineering feat of all time. One man was in charge—and hundreds of men and women were involved—and that man was George M. Low.

After leaving the Apollo space project with his work triumphantly accomplished and completed, he became president of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, NY. RPI is the oldest engineering school in our Nation. I do not wish to arouse any sectional memories of this body, but I would point out that the armor plates for the U.S. ship the Monitor were cast in Troy under the direction of RPI engineers; the designs of the Brooklyn Bridge heavily drew upon the work of RPI engineers.

George Low was as distinguished an academic administrator as he had been a NASA project manager. He greatly increased the research activities of RPI, reestablishing it as one of the major engineering centers of the world.

He died much too soon, much too early in a career that had demonstrated the extraordinary range of achievement of which he was capable.

Mr. President, we have seen the death within this last fortnight of a man who might properly be described as the greatest engineer the world has ever known, for surely he managed and directed the greatest engineering feat the world has ever known.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be included in the RECORD, with the grateful thanks of this body for all he did, anonymously but incomparably well, two obituaries of George Low.

There being no objection, the obituaries were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 18, 1984]

GEORGE M. LOW IS DEAD AT 58; HEADED APOLLO SPACE PROJECT

(By John Noble Wilford)

George M. Low, president of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, who was a driving force in the Apollo moon landing program, died of cancer yesterday in Troy, N.Y. He was 58 years old.

Mr. Low had been ill for months, suffering from recurrent melanoma. On Monday the White House announced that he would be awarded the President's Medal of Freedom for his contributions to education and the nation's space program.

In his 27 years with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and its predecessor, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, Mr. Low served as an engineer and manager in the Mercury and Gemini programs and was put in charge of redesigning the Apollo spacecraft after a fire on the launching pad killed three astronauts in 1967.

He later became deputy administrator of NASA and acting administrator in the early 1970's, when he negotiated the initial agreements leading to the joint American-Soviet mission in August 1975.

MOON LANDING RECALLED

Mr. Low's death came a day after the 15th anniversary of the launching of Apollo 11, bound for the first landing of men on the Moon on July 20, 1969.

Mr. Low assumed the presidency of Rensselaer, his alma mater, in 1976 and spearheaded the expansion of research at the institute and the development of a 300-acre technology park adjacent to the campus in Troy. In his tenure, the institute's research volume rose from $20 million a year to $600 million.

Mr. Low was born in Vienna on June 10, 1926. His family emigrated to the United States in 1940 and settled in the upstate New York town of Milford. He served in the Army in World War II and became a naturalized citizen in 1946. He then attended Rensselaer, where he earned bachelor's and master's degrees in aeronautical engineering.

After college, Mr. Low joined the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and was prominent in aerodynamic heating research. In 1961 he helped prepare the memorandum advising President Kennedy that the nation had the capability to put astronauts on the Moon and return them to Earth by the end of that decade, which led to the Apollo project.

APOLLO COMPLETELY REDESIGNED

Mr. Low was deputy director of the Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston when the Apollo spacecraft caught fire on Jan. 27, 1967, killing Lieut. Col. Virgil Grissom of the Air Force, Lieut. Col. Edward H. White 2d of the Air Force and Lieut. Comdr. Roger B. Chafee of the Navy.

In a shakeup of the Apollo management, Mr. Low was appointed to head the spacecraft program. For the next year and a half, he oversaw the Apollo's complete redesign and retesting, imposing more rigorous quality control and pressing to meet ambitious production schedules.

Of the Apollo rebuilding effort, Mr. Low wrote: "We once made a serious mistake, a mistake of not maintaining absolute control over all flammable material. Since then, we have made every conceivable effort to avoid similar mistakes. We have re-examined every drawing, every circuit and every component of the Apollo spacecraft. We have made thousands of changes in design, in manufacturing and in tests."

Associates said he was the type of spacecraft manager who often knew as much about the systems and components as the engineers working for him. After a minor flaw in a toggle switch on the spacecraft was discovered, Mr. Low went to great lengths to learn all he could about the performance and possible failures of all the toggle switches on the Apollo.

EXPERT ON TOGGLE SWITCHES

"I probably know as much about toggle switches today as anybody else does in the business," he told an interviewer. "In fact, I have a whole table full of various kinds in my office. An engineer on a project like Apollo must be willing to get into any level of detail."

Although he received much credit and many honors for the Apollo project, Mr. Low remained little known to the public. "My job," he once remarked, "was never as exciting as what the astronauts ate for breakfast."

Mr. Low was awarded numerous honorary degrees and was a member of the National Academy of Engineering. He was named last year to the White House Commission on Industrial Competition.

Surviving him are his wife, the former Mary Ruth McNamara, and five children: Mark, Diane, David, John and Nancy. David Low was recently named to the astronaut corps.

Funeral services will be private.

GEORGE M. LOW, 58, DIRECTOR OF APOLLO 11 MOON LANDING

TROY, NY.—George M. Low, 58, a former head of the nation's manned space program who had been president of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute since 1976, died of cancer July 17 at his home here.

Before becoming president of Rensselaer, he spent 18 years with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Houston and nine years with NASA's predecessor, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

As head of the committee that formulated plans for the Apollo manned lunar landing, he suggested to President John F. Kennedy in 1960 that an astronaut could walk on the moon within the decade.

"He guided NASA through a transition of new goals in the 1970s and beyond, and he negotiated the space agreements with the Soviet Union, which provided a foundation for the Apollo-Soyuz flight," said John McLeaish, a NASA spokesman.

Mr. Low was scheduled to receive the Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest award to a civilian, later this year.

Mr. Low was a native of Austria and came to this country in 1940. He served with the Army during World War II. He earned bachelor's and master's degrees in aeronautical engineering at Rensselaer. In 1949, he joined the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at the Lewis Research Center in Cleveland. He was named director of manned space flight at NASA in 1958.

He later moved to the Johnson Space Center in Houston as deputy director of the center, which controlled all manned flights. He took charge of the Apollo program in 1967 after a fire at Cape Kennedy killed three astronauts, and was in charge of the Apollo 11 mission, which landed the first manned spacecraft on the lunar surface on July 19, 1969.

In 1971, Mr. Low was named acting director of NASA and helped plan the space shuttle and joint Apollo-Soyuz mission. He was associate administrator of the agency before he left to take up the presidency of RPI.

Mr. Low has a reputation as a hard-driving manager and a savvy politician, both at NASA and at Rensselaer. In a long-range goals program he developed shortly after coming to the Institute, he outlined plans to make it one of the top technological institutions in the country, with a star-studded faculty and top-rated computer and electronics programs.

Under his leadership, the university launched a $3 million technology park in nearby North Greenbush, N.Y., and an on-campus "incubator program" that has launched several successful companies in high-technology fields such as computer-aided design and solar energy.

Survivors include his wife, Mary Ruth, and five children, Mark, Diane, George David, John and Nancy. George David Low recently was named to the astronaut training program.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is clear that the original plan of going to the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill and making it the business today will not work. A number of Senators are understandably absent or delayed. I am now advised it may be as late as 6 p.m. before some of them will be able to return to the Senate Chamber in order to participate in debate on the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill.

Mr. President, given those circumstances, it appears the better part of discretion to go ahead and lay down the bill at this time, and to then go out until tomorrow when people will be here and available and we can proceed in a more expeditious manner.

Mr. President, I have discussed this with the minority leader.

Mr. President, I now have a number of unanimous-consent requests which I will put with respect to other matters.

SENSE OF THE CONGRESS WITH RESPECT TO STATUS OF ANDREI SAKHAROV AND YELENA BONNER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, first in respect to the Sakharov concurrent resolution, we went out 3 weeks ago. There was an indication that even though there was a voice vote on that concurrent resolution, that we would have a rollcall vote, a motion to table, and a motion to reconsider that vote so that people could be recorded.

I have consulted with the minority leader, and he has indicated a preference to go to the concurrent resolution itself. Therefore, I make this unanimous-consent request:

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider the vote by which House Concurrent Resolution 332, relating to providing information concerning Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner, was agreed to be deemed agreed to and the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 332 tomorrow, Tuesday, July 24, 1984, at the hour of 2 p.m., with a vote to occur immediately without debate on the concurrent resolution, and that it be in order at this time to request the yeas and nays on the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in preparation for asking the Senate to turn briefly to the consideration of the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill, in accordance with section 904 of the Budget Act I move to waive section 303 of that act with respect to H.R. 5798 and any amendment thereto. I make this motion because, as the Chair is aware, we do not have a budget resolution at this time. In order to bring the pending appropriations bill before the Senate, it is deemed necessary to proceed in this manner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, having dealt with the budget waiver in the action just taken, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to the consideration of the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill, which is H.R. 5798.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5798) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and further purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BAKER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

(Later the following occurred:)

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, a moment ago two actions were taken which I am now going to ask the Senate to vitiate. The first was to adopt a budget waiver, and the second was to lay down the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill. For the benefit of those who are listening in their offices or elsewhere, may I explain that for technical reasons, good and valid reasons in the opinion of the leadership on this side, there are concerns about the exact language of the request on the waiver. Until those things are worked out, it seems unwise to have that measure pending. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the action taken by the Senate in the adoption of a budget waiver under the provision of section 303 and the action of the Senate in laying down the Treasury-Postal bill as the pending business be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not past the hour of 3 p.m., in which Senators may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, may I say it is the hope and the full expectation of the leadership on this side that we will be able to lay down the Treasury-Postal Service appropriations bill tomorrow and work out a budget waiver which will be satisfactory to all concerned, but it seems unwise to do that at this time.

Mr. President, with the hope that perhaps we can work out the language yet today, maybe it would be as well to extend the time for the transaction of routine morning business. Therefore, I now ask unanimous consent that the time for the transaction of routine morning business be extended until not later than 4 p.m. in which Senators may speak not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, earlier today we entered an order for the Senate to turn to the consideration of the Treasury-Postal Service appropriations bill, and passed the Budget Act waiver in respect to that.

Subsequently, that action was vitiated so that we would have more time to consider the language of the collateral unanimous-consent request that was presented for consideration and action.

I believe, Mr. President, that all of these matters have now been clarified and I wish now to put a series of unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. President, first I would say that the sequence in which I intend to put these requests is as follows: In a moment I will move the Budget Act waiver under section 303 of the Budget Act. After that, Mr. President, assuming that the waiver is granted, it will be the intention of the leadership on this side to ask the Senate to turn to the consideration of the Treasury-Postal Service appropriations bill.

Then, Mr. President, to put a unanimous-consent request with respect to the consideration of that bill.

After that, Mr. President, it will be the intention of the leadership on this side to ask the Senate to stand in recess until tomorrow, unless there is a further need for time for the transaction of routine morning business.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in accordance with section 904 of the Budget Act, I move to waive section 303 of that act with respect to H.R. 5798 and any amendments thereto. Mr. President, I so move in view of the fact that no first budget resolution has been adopted in order to bring the appropriations measure before the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. The waiver has been granted, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate turn to the consideration of the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill, H.R. 5798.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5798) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the United States Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 5798, the Treasury, Postal Service, and general Government appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985 be printed with amendments as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

I further ask unanimous consent that these amendments be deemed committee amendments and that this reprint be deemed the official version of the measure for purpose, of Senate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill, with the committee amendments, reads as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Treasury Department, the United States Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain Independent Agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I

Mr. BAKER. The amendments of the committee are those reflected in the recommendations contained in S. 2853, the Senate companion bill to H.R. 5798. Ordinarily, the committee would have been referred and reported the House passed bill with amendments. Unfortunately, final House action on the measure was delayed and rather than further hold up action in the Senate, the committee decided to proceed with an original bill.

Mr. President, this unusual procedure is necessary to facilitate Senate floor consideration of the Treasury appropriations bill. My request will incorporate the substance of the committee recommendations in the House bill currently on the calendar so that it will be printed in the form as if it were reported by the committee. This will permit the usual Senate floor consideration of appropriations bills by clearly delineating the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. President, I would further like to make clear that this request in no way adopts or implies agreement with any of the committee amendments. Each amendment is still subject to full floor debate and a vote.

Mr. President, the foregoing statement in respect to the bill was made for and on behalf of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee as the manager of the bill and at his request.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, has the Chair ruled on the last portion of the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the last statement to be a statement and not a request.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. on tomorrow; that on tomorrow after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a special order in favor of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] of not more than 15 minutes in length; to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend no later than the hour of 12 noon in which statements will be limited to not more than 2 minutes each; and that at the hour of 12 noon, the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 11 A.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 11 o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, at 3:47 p.m., recessed until Tuesday, July 24, 1984, at 11 a.m.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

PUBLIC LAW 98-369—DEFICIT REDUCTION ACT OF 1984

(Mr. CORRADA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, July 18, President Reagan signed the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-369). Enactment of that law has been described as a necessary first step in our Nation's efforts to cut the huge budget deficit which threatens our economic stability. I am in agreement that urgent action is needed if we are not to continue to mortgage our children's future and to regain a degree of control over the budget.

However, I believe that in our efforts to conclude debate over the Deficit Reduction Act, a grave injustice was done to the U.S. citizens living in Puerto Rico. In seeking to end the program of redistillation of distilled spirits, the Congress went beyond that to place restriction on a fundamental provision in the Puerto Rico Federal Relations Act, the law that regulates relations between the United States and Puerto Rico. That provision, which dates to the early part of this century, provides that all taxes collected under the internal revenue laws of the United States on articles produced in Puerto Rico and transported to the United States shall be covered over to the Treasury of Puerto Rico. The purpose of that provision was to enable the Government of Puerto Rico to provide better services to the people of Puerto Rico in areas such as health, education and housing, among others, since as a territory, Puerto Rico does not participate fully in all Federal programs.

At present, there are only two products—rum and tobacco—on which excise tax is collected by the Federal Government and rebated to Puerto Rico. We, in Puerto Rico, are very proud of the quality of our rum which has been called the best in the world. At present, the revenues derived from the rebate represent 10 percent of the operating budget of the Government of Puerto Rico. Under the provisions of Public Law 98-369, the excise tax on alcohol was increased by $2 per proof gallon to a total of $12.50, effective on October 1, 1985. However, the amount that may be covered over to the Treasury of Puerto Rico is capped at the current level of $10.50 per proof gallon. This action was taken unexpectedly by the Senate Finance Committee without any hearing on the effect of that restriction on the underlying provision in the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act. If the Congress had determined that a review of that provision in the law was necessary, it should have studied the issue and heard testimony of the need for it to make an informed judgment. Not only has Congress acted unilaterally in amending the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act (48 USCA section 734) without the consent of the Government of Puerto Rico, it acted without even consulting or listening to Puerto Rican officials before placing a cap on the rebate of excise taxes on rum.

Today, I am introducing legislation to remedy that injustice and to allow Puerto Rico to receive the full amount of the excise tax on rum that is produced in Puerto Rico and shipped to the U.S. mainland.

In the debate over the Deficit Reduction Act, the Congress also eliminated the Cane Neutral Spirits Program which was clearly within the scope of the excise tax cover over provision. Cane neutral spirits is a product of the distillation of cane, after rum has been produced. Thus, it is produced from cane and molasses the same as rum and the excise tax collected on its production should be rebated to Puerto Rico. However, this program was also eliminated during conference. My legislation will reverse that decision and allow the program to continue.

Mr. Speaker, as I stated on the floor when the conference report was brought up for consideration, this is a matter of grave importance to the people of Puerto Rico. I am hopeful that my bill will be the subject of hearings and serious consideration by the Ways and Means Committee. At this time, I would also like to extend my deep appreciation to my good friends and colleagues PETE STARK and CHARLIE RANGEL for their support and help during the debate on the Deficit Reduction Act. Their support was deep and unwavering and I am looking forward to working with them to rectify the injustice that was perpetrated on the people of Puerto Rico.

WHAT IS JUSTICE?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the goal of civil rights legislation is justice for individuals. But very often we forget this simple truth. Robert A. Destro, a member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, has addressed the question of justice in the 1980's and I want to bring to the attention of our colleagues his incisive and informed views on the subject.

At this time I wish to insert in the RECORD a speech given by Commissioner Robert A. Destro at the First Annual Human Rights Conference of the Illinois Department of Human Rights in Chicago, on May 18, 1984.

REMARKS OF COMMISSIONER ROBERT A. DESTRO, FIRST ANNUAL HUMAN RIGHTS CONFERENCE, ILLINOIS DEPARTMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS, CHICAGO—MAY 18, 1984

Good morning. It is a great honor to have the opportunity to address the First Annual Human Rights Conference this morning, and to be in Chicago. I would like to express my thanks on behalf of the entire Commission to the department and to Ms. Tucker and Mr. Barbosa for inviting a representative of the Commission to give a federal perspective on the theme of the Conference: "Towards a Just Society: The Civil Rights Struggle, Where Are We and Where Are We Going?" Unfortunately you will be hearing me, rather than Ms. Chavez, even though it may be somewhat of a disappointment to those passing out leaflets out front. I am looking forward with great interest to hearing the presentations of both Ms. Wyatt and Mr. McKnight, and to meeting personally with some of you before I return to Washington this afternoon.

I stand before you this morning as one Commissioner, and the views you will hear are my own. As I thought about what to say this morning, I found myself immersed in all kinds of issues. Should I tie the agenda of the Commission—and the recent controversy over its membership—into the broader, overall picture of the civil rights struggles we face today, or speak about broad, traditional policy issues like affirmative action, quotas or fair housing? What about "emerging" civil rights issues such as the impact of laws and regulations on the integrity and structure of poor, minority families who must comply or lose their lifeline, or the increasing isolation of an underclass largely made up of minorities and women with children? All are important issues, and any one would have made a find backdrop against which to present the view from the federal level.

But I decided to take a slightly different approach, and to address the question of "where we are going?" in civil rights from a more philosophical perspective. The reason for my choice of topic is fairly simple: it is difficult to explain where one is going or how one plans to get there as a Commissioner without some explanation of where one is coming from.

As a recently appointed Commissioner I am painfully aware that some of the Commission's actions since January have been controversial. This was expected, for the new appointments were opposed by some—and supported by others—on grounds directly related to our views on specific civil rights issues. But the controversy goes far deeper than differences on discrete issues. It is a symptom of a far more important development in the life of the Commission and the struggle for civil rights generally.

We have come a long way since that day 30 years ago yesterday when Supreme Court finally brought the pernicious doctrine of government-sanctioned separation by race to a well-deserved end. The fact that there is a Commission on Civil Rights, and that there are agencies such as the Human Relations Commission and the department of Human Rights attest to the strength of the commitment of the vast majority of Americans to equal justice under law. This was a commitment which did not exist 30 years ago.

Because we have come so far, and because awareness and sensitivity concerning civil rights issues motivates a desire for even greater strides in the future toward the goal of equality of right and opportunity, the focus of discussion inevitably turns toward the question of the means by which we were to attain our common goals. In 1957, the only answer to pleas for civil rights legislation the Congress could give was to appoint a Commission. The goals were the same as today, but legal means were not made available at the federal level for seven more years.

Today there is, by and large, agreement on the basic goals we wish to attain in the name of civil rights. Likewise, there is no doubt that discrimination and lack of opportunity exists, and the only real questions are how to eliminate them once they are found. Today's struggle then, must be seen as one which focuses on the means to end and remedy discrimination. As a result, the principle question for all concerned is: How do we get to the just society from here?

It is from this perspective that I will speak this morning; for controversy at the federal level is primarily over the types of remedies we will use to solve current problems. The debate over the most controversial of these means to remedy past discrimination—whether the issue is quotas, reparations, program-specific or general federal fund cut-offs, or mandatory school busing—will inevitably lead the debaters into an argument over the justice of the chosen remedy, and its impact on the lives of the innocent individuals who will be affected by its use. So before I launch into a description of the "view" from the federal level, permit me to reflect for the next few minutes on the concepts of "justice" and the "just society."

Those of us who deal with law and human rights issues hear much about "justice": We speak of equal justice, distributive justice, justice in the sense of "fairness", just results, just procedures, and courts of justice. We even refer to the judges of our Supreme Court as "Justices", partly out of respect for their function, and partly to remind them that it is their duty to "do justice" under the law as it is written.

But what is "justice"? If we set aside the special, limiting senses in which we use the term: for example, courts of justice or justice-as-fairness, we are left with a core idea—and an ideal—which energizes all of us who are committed to the cause of human rights. It is this personal sense of justice which is outraged by overt racial or ethnic bigotry, and which is frustrated by its more subtle forms and stratagems. It is this inner sense of justice which angers us when we fear that hard-fought gains in civil rights are threatened by those who do not share our individual sense of justice. And it is the same sense of justice which should sicken us when we hear of persons who should know better attempting to justify the marking of mentally or physically disabled infants for death in the nursery because their disability, together with their race or economic status, might have an allegedly "adverse" effect on the "quality of one's life."

More importantly for the future, however, it is this sense of justice which keeps us looking forward. Forward, towards a just society where the rights of each individual rights are respected, and equality of opportunity without regard to race, sex, creed or origin is a concept as internalized by the body politic as today's commitment to free markets and freedom of speech.

Given this individual sense of justice, what do we mean by it? I suspect that were I to ask each of you to write an essay on "justice", there would be more definitions than there were people in this room. The cause for such a multiplicity of definitions, of course, is that we use the term "justice" to serve many functions in the cause of civil rights. But we rarely take the time to consider what each of us means by it, and to determine whether that personal definition is consistent with the principles of justice enshrined in our Constitution.

So, you say, what is the point? Quite simply, it is that in order to join forces in working toward the common goal of a just society, we must share at least a fundamental understanding of what we mean when we speak of "justice." Why? Because our concept of justice defines not only what we want the just society to look like, but also how it will act, and what methods we will use to get there from here.

In my view, the key element of the just society is the treatment of the individual as we pursue the common good. In fact, the very concept of the "common good" should be synonymous with the good of individuals. Only individuals have both a unique identity and character, as well as the power and potential to develop them fully. A collective such as "society" can absorb the individual and prosper, but it cannot bring about either the all-round flourishing of the individual, or the development of the uniqueness we call "human dignity" when it subordinates individual needs to group desires. It is for this reason that both justice and the common good must be seen as the end results of policies which respect the human potential and dignity of each individual. Both ends and means must be judged by this standard. When it is ignored—even temporarily—for individual or collective reasons, injustices and affronts to individual human dignity take place. Each of you in this room has seen vivid examples of the degree to which human dignity can be affronted by bigotry, discrimination, servitude, violence, hate, and helplessness in the face of events beyond individual control. Far too often these affronts are so widespread in the collective enterprise we know as society that each member of entire races or classes of individuals may feel the pain and frustration that results. But it is important to recall that only an individual can feel pain, and that only an individual is the subject of rights. Classes or collectives do not.

Viewed from this perspective then, Justice becomes a shorthand term for describing an attitude and mode of behavior which should govern our relationship with all other persons, regardless of race, sex, creed, disability or age. It defines not only the rights of others, but also the duty we owe to each of them regardless of their status. From this duty imposed by justice is derived one of its most critical components: equality. Not a blind equality that ignores human needs and differences, but one which draws from the Aristotelian concept of balance and proportion. An equality of duty to respect the rights and needs of each individual which is imposed on each of us as a condition for claiming equality of rights for ourselves.

How then, does all this relate to the civil rights struggle of the 1980's? And what is this one Commissioner's view from the federal level? It begins with the observation that we are agreed on basic civil rights goals such as equality of opportunity and elimination of both present discrimination and the pervasive present effects of past discrimination. But agreement breaks down beyond this point. If you examine both the record and the rhetoric surrounding present-day civil rights issues—including, I might add, the rhetoric about the appointment of the new Civil Rights Commission itself—you will see a growing debate over the legitimacy of the means we will use to achieve our goals. The outcome of the debate will rest largely on a decision to accept or reject the view taken by the Constitution, Declaration of Independence and laws of this nation that the individual is the repository of human dignity and may not suffer discrimination at the hand of government or private individual on the basis of characteristics he or she cannot control such as race, sex, national origin, age or disability; or on the basis of a characteristic no one has the right to ask you to change: your religion.

It is in this framework that the view from the federal level begins to take shape. We see Congress moving ahead with great speed to amend the major cross-cutting civil rights legislation Title IV, Title IX, Section 504 and the Age Discrimination Act. But there is controversy over the content of the proposed amendments. We see record levels of minority voting and registration, as well as greater numbers of minority and women at all levels of government. But there is controversy over the means to be used to increase those levels. The Commission's agenda is replete with examples of the pressing civil rights issues of the 1980's: comparable worth as a means of acheiving pay equity for women; the growing racism aimed at the Asian-American community; religious discrimination and intolerance; affirmative action in higher education, and voluntary and involuntary methods of school desegregation, to name only a few. Here too, there is controversy over the justice of proposed remedies and the priorities we have set for our studies.

There is much activity at the federal level, and I believe that much of it is moving in a positive direction. We have come far too long a distance legally and morally to change our basic directions in civil rights now, and it is with this in mind that I return to the central concern of this speech: the dignity and value of the individual. For if I have one great concern at the federal level it is with remedies which fail to account for the rights of the individual.

When Linda Brown won her case before the Supreme Court 30 years ago, it was, and still is, rightly seen as a landmark change in social policy. But it was also a victory for individual children—millions of them born and unborn—who will have the opportunity to grow and develop their characters and intellects free of stigma of inferiority which was the legacy of Dredd Scott and Plessy v. Furgesson. When, shortly after Brown, the Supreme Court conceded that "all deliberate speed" was fast enough to eliminate dual systems, we know what happened to the children: many remained in segregated schools. It took over ten years until the order came to eliminate segregation "root and branch". Why? Because group needs took precedence over individual rights.

So too with the debate over school busing. How long will it take us before we look to the educational interests of individual children who are treated like pawns in a chess match over social policy. Is this justice? For whom? A school bus is nothing more than a machine, a tool in an arsenal to improve the quality of education for children. If using buses will improve education do it, and quickly! If not, how can we say we are being just to any child who needs an education to escape a crushing cycle of poverty and substandard academic performance. Let us replace busing as the symbol of civil rights in education and install in its place the original, intended legatee of Brown v. Board of Education: the child in need of education. First, do justice. Give the individual the tools to change his or her own life and society will change accordingly.

I do not feel that this suggestion is "unjust", but I suspect that there will be some who see an anti-civil rights motive in it. Expressed doubts about the Civil Rights Commission's new majority have reflected a fear that its basic mission to identify problems, and to suggest just and workable solutions has been perverted because its sense of justice is based on individual rather than social needs. This simply is not true. I believe that each member of the new Commission is concerned about discrimination, and this concern is strong and rooted deeply in each individual member's belief that justice as he or she understands it must be done. Definitions may differ over what justice will permit, but the concern and the commitment are the same.

There may well be disagreements over the means to be used to accomplish ultimate justice, and some of those disagreements rest in differences of opinion over the treatment of innocent individuals in the face of long-standing and compelling group demands for race-conscious remedies for those who cannot prove individual grievances. But can we really question the good faith of those who argue that the law cannot tolerate racial or other preferences based on immutable characteristics without doing violence to both the letter and the spirit of justice? Human dignity does not flourish—it suffers—when each person is not treated as a unique, valuable human being. To focus on a group rather than the individual reduces the dignity of both.

So what do we do? How do we solve these pressing problems without doing harm? The problem of present effects of past discrimination that quota plans seek to solve is real, we all know it, and we would have to be blind not to see these effects. But the justice of the means chosen to remedy them can validly be questioned, as the Supreme Court did in Bakke When it rejected race-based quotas. Does this mean we give up? No. It means that we must constantly ask ourselves where and how we go from here. We must ask ourselves the hard questions like "what is the difference between a number 1 and a number 7 on a promotion list assuming all are 'qualified' "? We look at the causes of poverty in minority communities, and ask ourselves if some of our pet government education welfare or social programs or licensing schemes might not be a part of the problem rather than part of the cure. We must be willing to face the fact that justice does not permit discrimination as a means to a just end.

If follows then, that with a concerted effort armed at empowering individuals to find and follow their own destiny, the civil rights struggles of the 1980's can be won. But it will not be easy. The "hard" questions must be asked and answered and all answers must take into account the "justice" of proposed remedies as they affect individuals.

The Civil Rights Commission can and must play an important role in this process by focusing its studies on the multiplicity of difficult issues which lurk within seemingly simple issues of "social justice". The justice of the means used is but one of them. In order to play this role and to fulfill our statutory function of advising Congress and the President, we need your help and forthright constructive criticism. If you do not share the same ideal of justice as we, then tell us, and admit your starting point. The issues are far to important to allow discussion to remain at the semantic level.

Certainly these meager suggestions raise more questions than they were ever intended to answer, but that is one of my functions as a Commissioner. The viewpoint of this Commissioner on the theme of the Conference, however, is clear: If we are to reach our goal of the just society, we must empower each individual to reach out for his or her own destiny. We must assure that individual human dignity does not ever take a back seat to social needs. We must be frank about our reasons for any subordination of the individual person, whether the individual is a black women, a hispanic child, a Jewish immigrant, or a Polish grandmother. Even the ubiquitous white, Anglo-Saxon, Protestant male has the right to equal treatment under the law. It's all a question of balancing our need and our desire for justice against the fundamental principle that all of us, men and women, are created equal and stand before God and our fellow humans with an equal claim for mutual respect and cooperation in the tasks of life. When all of us internalize that truth, so eloquently stated as an ideal by the Declaration of Independence and as a rule of conduct by the Constitution, we will be far along the road toward attaining a just society.

Thank you.●

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take some time today, and a little time later on this week to talk about the period between the two conventions of the Democratic and Republican Parties and to talk about some of the lessons of the Democratic Convention and some of the challenges, I think, to the Republican Convention.

The Democrats had a very enthusiastic and a very effective convention last week, and I think every Member of this House has to feel some sense of pride that a fellow Member, the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. FERRARO], has been chosen to be the Vice Presidential nominee of the Democrats.

There were some superb speeches made last week; most notably by Governor Cuomo in the keynote address; later by Reverend Jackson, by Senator HART, and the acceptance speeches by Mr. Mondale and Ms. FERRARO. In addition, the Democrats adopted a platform.

What fascinated me in watching the performance is one of the central problems in American Government. That is, how do we have a campaign in which we can talk about certain key ideas and we can talk about certain basic problems and opportunites facing America in a way that the American people have an increased sense of understanding, and an increased ability to govern themselves.

I was struck as I listened to a great deal of the emotion, very powerful, very effective emotion, which came out of San Francisco: That there are two branches of populism; two great traditions of populism in America. There is a tradition characterized by William Jennings Bryan in the 1890's of a populism of demagoguery, a populism which exaggerates, distorts, and even, on occasion, deceives. Which makes up its facts, which picks very selectively its version of reality.

I should go on and say that that kind of populism gave populism a bad name. That the word populist has all too often come to mean an ignorant player on emotions. That, in a sense, to be a populist has been a negative in modern government.

However, there is an earlier and deeper tradition of populism. The populism of James Madison, of Thomas Jefferson, of Benjamin Franklin. That populism was best characterized by James Madison in a statement which is on the Madison Building of the Library of Congress, in which he said:

> Knowledge shall forever govern ignorance. And a people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power which only knowledge gives.

I would like to repeat that quote because I think it is so central to how we should wage the campaign this fall, and it is a quote I intend to use often and I fear some of my colleagues may grow tired of it:

> Knowledge shall forever govern ignorance and a people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power which only knowledge gives.

The tradition of Madison and Jefferson and Franklin led, in its most eloquent example, to the Federalist Papers, possibly the most stunning intellectual document ever written by practicing politicians to explain a current political problem. The Federalist Papers are legitimately and honorably classics.

So, in the tradition of that more informed and more information-oriented populism, I would like to talk about where the two parties are and where America is and what some of our problems are as we face this fall. We are at, I think, a great turning point, a turning point which some of us have characterized as a choice between a liberal welfare state and a conservative opportunity society. The turning point, I think, made a serious step in the correct direction of choice last week when the National Democratic Party picked a liberal welfare state candidate for President, a liberal welfare state candidate for Vice President, adopted a liberal welfare state platform, and heard a series of eloquent speeches, all of them basically by liberal welfare state advocates.

When the Republicans go to Dallas, it is my hope that in our convention we will offer as clear a choice, as firm a set of opportunities to look to the future.

But what troubled me coming out of San Francisco, and what I think will make it extremely difficult to have a fair and legitimate and serious effort at self-government this fall was the quality of language, the strong demagogic statements, the incendiary rhetoric. It was fascinating. In his superb keynote address, Governor Cuomo said, and I quote:

> We must answer our opponents' polished and appealing rhetoric with a more telling reasonableness and rationality. We must win this case on the merits. We must get the American people to look past the glitter, beyond the showmanship, to the reality of the hard substance of things and we will do it not so much with speeches that sound good as with speeches that are good and sound, not so much with speeches that will bring people to their feet as with speeches that bring people to their senses.

I think that phrase, that pledge, that appeal to rationality is exactly right. At its best, campaigns in America should be between two toughly reasoned, well argued, passionately believed versions of the future, but they should be based on a sound, rational, logical argument.

I had in that sense three concerns with the Democrats in San Francisco. First, that again and again their facts were simply wrong; second, that their analogies tended to be misleading; and third, that in some instances I do not understand where on this planet they get their information, or what world they think they are dealing with.

Let me begin first with their facts, and my focus today on Governor Cuomo's keynote address and on the platform.

Governor Cuomo said, and I quote, "There are more poor than ever."

That is simply not true, period. That statement is absolutely false. If it were true, Ronald Reagan should be impeached, not just defeated. But it is not true, and there is no reasonable argument or defense for the statement by Governor Cuomo, "There are more poor than ever." It is simply not true.

He went on to say:

> There are ghettos where thousands of young people without a job or an education give their lives away to drug dealers every day.

That is true, and we on the Republican side in this House have been fighting for over a year to bring the President's crime bill to the floor to be able to stop precisely what Governor Cuomo was complaining about. If he has a complaint about the fact that, as he correctly said, there are thousands of young people giving their lives away to drug dealers every day, he should have taken that complaint up on the floor of the convention with the Democratic leadership of the House because it is the liberal Democratic leadership of the House, one of whose Members is now the Vice Presidential nominee, who have in fact stopped the President's efforts to pass a crime bill that would make it harder for drug dealers to corrupt and addict our children.

Governor Cuomo went on to make an excellent analogy of the wagon train and to make some fairly harsh statements about Republicans. But I found his analogy about a wagon train interesting because I have recently been reading Bernard DeVoto's great study of 1848. Bernard DeVoto was one of the great historians of the American West, so I happened to have been reading about wagon trains.

It occurred to me, the question I would ask of any liberal Democrat who would talk about wagon trains is: Show me a wagon train that had food stamps. Show me a wagon train that had able-bodied adults who were not working. Show me a wagon train that dealt with its criminals while allowing them to wander around committing new crimes. Show me a wagon train that taxed the productive in order to subsidize people who did not want to do a day's work.

I think that the case for welfare reform is precisely made by his example of a wagon train. Further, I would say to him the overwhelming majority of wagon trains prayed, yet the Democratic leadership of this House will not let us bring up a voluntary prayer-in-school amendment. On the liberal Democratic wagon train presumably they would outlaw prayer unless it was private and covert.

So I would say also, wagon trains that survived tended to be tough minded, disciplined, hard working, and well armed. They resembled Ronald Reagan's defense budget far more than Walter Mondale's. They understood the world they were moving into as dangerous.

Finally, pioneers who were successful, who survived, always thought about the future and always invested in a better future. They did not tax away the present in order to subsidize fun and games but, instead, they worked very, very diligently to improve their lot.

In that setting, I would suggest to Governor Cuomo, choosing the wagon train is the worst possible analogy for a liberal Democrat. Wagon trains involve too much hard work, too much individual initiative, too much risk taking, too many entrepreneurs and, in fact, involve precisely the kind of things that supply side advocates have been talking about.

He went on to talk about Franklin Roosevelt, and I think, frankly, that Franklin Roosevelt deserves to be talked about. He was a great President. He did many things for this country. But then Governor Cuomo, in a moment of excess says, speaking of the American people:

> For nearly 50 years we have carried them all to new levels of comfort and security and dignity, even affluence.

I think the verb there is very, very important.

I have two complaints about this sentence, and I will repeat it: "For nearly 50 years we carried them all to new levels of comfort and security and dignity, even affluence." I have two objections. The first is that nothing can teach you more about liberal Democrats than the verb he uses. What arrogance for the Democrat leadership to say, "We carried them."

My impression, growing up in a working family, growing up in a family that included steelworkers, union members, blue-collar workers, is that the American people worked their way to new levels of comfort and security and dignity, even affluence. My impression is that an awful lot of Americans worked all day and went to school at night to get ahead. My impression is that an awful lot of Americans gave up a six-pack of beer or gave up a vacation or gave up a new suit in order to save the money to get ahead. My impression is that it was not the liberal Democratic Party leadership that "carried them." If anything, it is just the opposite. It is the American people who have carried the Government, not the Government which has carried the American people.

So in that sense this one sentence, it seems to me, gives us as clear a distinction between the two parties as you could ask for, and it is no wonder that 3 nights later Walter Mondale promised to raise taxes. If liberal Democrats honestly believe that it is the Government and the Democratic Party that has carried the American people, no wonder they think they have the right to raise taxes; they are just taking back what they carried the American people to get.

On the other hand, if you believe, as I do and as most Republicans do, and particularly as populist Republicans do, that the American people work very hard for what they have and that they deserve the right to protect their take-home pay, then there are very good reasons why the American people should question whether Government deserves their money more than their families do. I think in that setting that Governor Cuomo's keynote speech gave us a far deeper insight into what is basically wrong with the liberal Democratic Party and the liberal welfare state when he points out to us that they "carried us to new levels."

But, second, it is simply not true to say that 1980, under Carter-Mondale, was a peak of affluence in the American Nation. The American people reached their peak of personal affluence under John F. Kennedy and in the early years of Lyndon Johnson when they were practicing precisely the Reaganomics approach of cutting taxes and increasing the productivity of the economy. From 1965 to 1980 the real take-home pay of working Americans dropped. Taxes went up, inflation went up as prices rose, and people were pushed into higher tax brackets, and one of the reasons the Carter-Mondale ticket was defeated in 1980 was that Governor Cuomo is wrong. The average working American had a deep sense in 1980 that they had less money, they had less of a future, they had less of an opportunity, and they had less take-home pay, and that in fact the good ideas of Franklin Roosevelt and the very important concepts of the New Deal had become obsolete, worn out, wrong-headed, and terribly expensive big Government bureaucracy and high taxation by the time of the Carter-Mondale administration. And there is not a single mention, either in the keynote speech or in the other speeches I will talk about or in the platform, of the level of economic decay and pain the Carter-Mondale administration brought us to. In fact, it shows up next when Governor Cuomo discovers the deficit.

It is fascinating to me, as a conservative and someone who has been active for 24 years now since I was a high school student saying that deficits are bad, to suddenly in the last 2 years finding liberal Democrats discovering deficits. It is a little bit like a large whiskey company discovering alcoholism. Suddenly liberal Democrats who believe in big Government, who love big Government, who pass every big Government program, who vote for every big Government bill, who believe deeply in spending, suddenly get up and say, "My goodness, there is a deficit." And fascinatingly, enough, the deficit is always Ronald Reagan's.

Now, there are two things totally wrong with arguing that the deficit is Reagan's. The first is that it is unconstitutional. There can be no spending in America, in the Government, that does not pass the House of Representatives. Yet the liberal Democrats have the speakership, the liberal Democrats have control of the House, the liberal Democrats have control of the committees, and the liberal Democrats control the calendar, and yet they say or they suggest that it is the President's deficit. Let me quote from Governor Cuomo: "the President's deficit." That is just constitutionally not true; it is not possible. We would have to be a dictatorship for it to be the President's deficit.

But there is a second reason, and, frankly, it is one that personally irritates me. I was 11 years old when the Democratic Party took over the House of Representatives. They have controlled it every single year since I was 11. I recognize that, with my gray hair and everything, that is a long time ago. I am now 41. So for 30 years the Democratic Party has owned the House of Representatives. They have controlled every committee, they have controlled the calendar, and for every single day for 30 years they have had somebody sitting up here in the Speaker's chair, every day for 30 years, and then they turn to those of us who are younger populist Republicans and say to us that the deficit is our fault. They built the welfare state, they created the spending machine, they passed the regulations, and they passed the appropriations, and then to turn to us and say, "Oh, by the way, all of this mess is yours" is a little bit like a guy who starts an avalanche and then blames the guy at the bottom of the hill for the snowfall.

No; it is not the President's deficit. While the President might have done more to stop it, the fact is that for a conservative President dealing with a Democratic House of Representatives, he has shown more courage than anyone in the news media would have thought 4 years ago. The fact is that it is precisely the liberal Democrats who celebrated in San Francisco who have only one answer to the deficit.

Just remember, any time you hear a liberal Democrat say, "deficit," they mean "tax increase," and at least Walter Mondale is totally honest. His answer to big Government spending is big Government taxes. He wants to rush us right back to the Carter-Mondale tradition of biting into your take-home pay so that you and I do not have enough money to spend for ourselves and so that we can then be turning to Government, which will now be huge, to get back from the Government the money they took from us in our take-home pay.

Now, I find when I go around to folks, when I go around even to high school kids, kids who are now working and who have had money taken out of their paycheck, and I say to them, "How many of you want me to raise your taxes so we can buy more welfare state, so we can buy more Washington bureaucracy, so we can have more red tape?" I do not get very many hands raised, because the average American says, "Wait a second. Washington is a city of bureaucracy. Washington is filled with waste."

We just had a General Accounting Office report that said that $2 billion out of the $12 billion spent on food stamps is fraud. And the average American says, "Well, now, wait a second. Why don't you save the $2 billion instead of continuing to run a very wasteful welfare state and raise my taxes?"

Most Americans feel that if money is going to be wasted, maybe they ought to waste it themselves instead of giving it to the Government to waste for them.

And I would say also that that applies to the Pentagon. When people read about a $400 hammer their attitude is that maybe we ought to reform procurement to buy $9 hammers instead of raising an extra $381 from the American people.

When Walter Mondale does not pay any attention to cutting waste and fraud, does not pay any attention to reorganizing the Government, ridicules the President's efforts to hold down spending, promises $45 to $50 billion in new spending for special interest groups while he wins the nomination, and then turns around, with that record of big spending, big Government spending, and big promises, and says, "Oh, by the way, I am going to be honest with you. I am going to raise your taxes," I think at least he is letting the American people choose.

If you want a liberal welfare state that has massive tax increases taken from your take-home pay, if you want less take-home pay, you have a candidate for President, and his name is Walter Mondale.

Now, Governor Cuomo goes on—and I have to say that I have the greatest admiration for the chutzpah which seems to be built into professional Democratic politicians—and having given a brilliant, emotional, impassioned, classic attack speech, he blames Ronald Reagan for "incendiary rhetoric." I could not quite believe it when I went back and reread the text of Governor Cuomo's speech. After beating up on Republicans and after beating up on President Reagan, saying wild, almost hysterical things, he then attacks Reagan for "incendiary rhetoric."

Just let me read part of his quote here. He says that the world is more dangerous—and he is blaming Reagan now—and that Reagan has done this "by escalating into a frenzy the nuclear arms race."

Now, it takes a liberal Democratic world view to blame Ronald Reagan for the nuclear arms race. The Soviet Union has been putting three SS-20 missiles a week into Eastern Europe. Those are theater-level nuclear missiles. The Soviet Union has been building up its forces inside the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is apparently planning to test its third new model of intercontinental ballistic missile in violation of some agreements we have.

All President Reagan has done is fulfill promises made by Jimmy Carter. It was President Carter who proposed building the MX. It was President Carter who proposed putting the Pershing II in Western Europe at the request of our allies.

In great elections held in Germany, in France, in Britain, the parties which favor the United States and NATO putting missiles into Europe to protect Europe have won, and yet in this setting it is Ronald Reagan, according to Governor Cuomo, who escalates to a frenzy the nuclear arms race.

There seems to be a habit among liberal Democrats, as Senator GOLDWATER recalls, to blame America first. Whatever happens in the world, blame America first.

I was in a call-in show last night and a man called in and said, "The Reagan administration rigged the shooting down of the Korean airliner by the Soviets in order to pass a defense budget in the Congress."

And I am serious, my colleague from Pennsylvania is laughing, but he said, "I don't know how they managed the timing, but it was brilliant that they were able to manipulate the Soviets into shooting down a Korean airliner just the weekend before the Congress voted on the defense budget."

Now, aside from the savagery of suggesting that an American President would kill almost 300 innocent civilians flying in an airliner to pass a bill, the insanity of believing that the peaceful, harmless, Soviet Union was tricked by the militaristic aggressive Americans into shooting down a Korean airliner, you know, is almost outside the bounds of reason.

How do you talk to people like that? I mean, their version of the world would have blamed Neville Chamberlain and Winston Churchill for World War II because they scared Adolf Hitler.

How do you deal with people who have that kind of a world view, and yet elected Democratic politicians foster that belief? It was a liberal Democrat in this House who said in effect last year that the Soviets had to shoot down the Korean airliner because after all we threatened the Soviet Union so they were afraid and they had no other choice, and it was a New York Democrat who said that.

Consider this statement from Governor Cuomo:

> We give money to Latin American governments that murder nuns and then lie about it.

Now, I want to repeat that sentence because it is so totally untrue, that if politicians were subject to libel suits, Governor Cuomo could be sued: "We give money to Latin American governments that murder nuns and then lie about it."

I presume he is referring to the tragic killing of four nuns in El Salvador, who were not killed by the Government of El Salvador, whose murderers under considerable pressure from this Congress and from the Reagan administration were ultimately brought to justice, were tried and convicted.

Is there any mention in here about the fact that it was a free democratic Government of El Salvador that forced those men to go to trial? No.

Is there any indication in here that it was a free democratic Government of El Salvador that worked with the United States to try to clean up the police force of El Salvador? No.

Is there any sign in here that there are far fewer deaths in El Salvador under Ronald Reagan than there were under Jimmy Carter? No.

Instead, what you have is an absolutely false, vicious statement, that Governor Cuomo should have been ashamed for putting in a keynote address.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. WALKER. I think it is also important to note that while he was using that as an indictment of Ronald Reagan, the nuns were killed during the Carter administration and not during the Reagan administration and in fact it was the Carter administration that decided to put military aid into El Salvador following the murder of the nuns in that country, so that even the indictment of Ronald Reagan, let alone as the gentleman points out the indictment of the Government of El Salvador, even the indictment of Ronald Reagan is just wrong on all counts.

Mr. GINGRICH. Let me understand this. It was under Carter-Mondale that the nuns were killed and it was a Carter-Mondale administration decision to go ahead and continue and in fact to increase the financing of the El Salvadoran Government in an effort to stop the Communist efforts that were coming in from Nicaragua?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. That is the real historic pattern and the Reagan administration has simply followed on in El Salvador the policies that were begun under Carter-Mondale. The 55 advisers that are in there are advisers that were originally committed under the Carter-Mondale administration and it was also the Carter-Mondale administration that decided to put military aid into El Salvador in the first place, another policy which this administration has continued.

So Governor Cuomo in trying to indict Ronald Reagan is in fact doing a devastating indictment of the man who ultimately became the nominee of the party.

Mr. GINGRICH. Well, it is interesting that there was apparently no indication in the Mondale camp to correct this speech. Presumably they saw the speech in advance.

Mr. WALKER. In fact, I saw one television reporter try to raise the question with somebody from the Mondale camp and it was shrugged off as being just kind of nonsense, that we do not even want to discuss that kind of thing.

Mr. GINGRICH. Well, I think the gentleman is raising exactly the point I wanted to start today and continue with during this 3-week break between the conventions.

It is a very hard thing to say and I know many of our colleagues will be very upset with me for saying it, but the fact is the Democrats have gotten into a habit recently of making up whatever statement will help them at that moment, without any reference to facts, without any reference to historical reality, without any reference to the world they live in.

This San Francisco convention was a classic example. Let me continue.

Again, this is in a speech which he argues should be calm and rational.

He goes onto say:

> Our policy, our foreign policy drifts with no real direction other than in hysterical commitment to an arms race that leads nowhere if we are lucky and if we are not, it could lead us to bankruptcy or war.

Now, I would suggest that this summarizes the central weakness of the liberal Democratic foreign policy. Arms races do not lead to war. In fact, there is a recent study out that looked at arms races over the centuries. Arms races are started by countries that are afraid of each other, sometimes for good reason.

Was it the British arms buildup in 1938 and 1939 that led to World War II and therefore were they responsible for Adolf Hitler having started World War II?

Was it the American naval buildup that led to World War II in the Pacific?

Can you really make a strong case that with the Russians invading Afghanistan, with the Iranians becoming more and more powerful, with the North Vietnamese launching offensives in Southeast Asia, with the Cubans in Nicaragua establishing a Communist base and efforts by the Communists to establish satellites or colonies in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador, that it is an hysterical American commitment to an arms race that is the problem?

In other words, it is not the Russians. There are no real dangers in the world, except that Ronald Reagan likes weapons; but then the gall of the next statement:

> Of course, we must have a strong defense. Of course, Democrats are for a strong defense.

Let me just say, as somebody who serves in this House of Representatives, that is baloney, There is no "of course" to it. There are a large number of Democrats who do not believe in a strong defense and if you do not believe that, you can look at the voting record right here on the House floor. There are some Democrats who have never in their entire career voted for a defense bill. There are other Democrats who systematically voted for every weakening amendment. There are some Democrats, conservatives and moderates, who are for a strong defense. There are other Democrats, moderate liberals, who are for the strongest defense they have to have, but there are a heck of a lot of liberal Democrats who are for a very weak defense indeed.

He goes on to say:

> Now we have no real commitment to our friends or to our ideals, not to human rights, not to the refuseniks, not to Sakharov.

That has got to be one of the most incredible sentences about foreign policy I have ever read. Remember, Governor Cuomo's party is in the process of nominating a Vice-Presidential nominee who had voted for the Studds amendment which would in effect have required pulling out of Central America.

The liberal Democratic leadership in the House is against any kind of pressure covertly on Nicaragua, has been willing to weaken our position in Central America, and to suggest that it is Reagan who has no real commitment to our friends after the 3½ years of fighting with the liberal Democrats in the Congress to be able to help the European allies, to be able to help people in the Middle East, to be able to help our friends in Central America, to suggest that we have no commitment to the refusniks and to Sakharov, when it is the Reagan administration which has been putting active pressure on the Soviets or the liberal Democrats passed paper resolutions, it takes a pretty good bit of gall to write and deliver that sentence.

Let me go deeper.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Is it not true that much of the incendiary rhetoric that was referred to in the course of the Democratic Convention by a number of speakers is, in fact, the very language that the President has used in order to point out the kind of things that are happening in the Soviet Union, the human rights violations, the problems that led to a Sakharov being put in virtual isolation and prison, that it is precisely because Ronald Reagan says those kinds of things that the Democrats call that an attempt to raise fears and undercut our ability to deal with the Soviets. Yet, then they want to turn around and blame him for the fact that Sakharov has not been freed.

It seems to me that once again they have a double standard that is completely irrelevant in the real world.

Mr. GINGRICH. I think you are exactly right, and I think that it is again part of the process of I think almost total irresponsibility in managing to focus only on the United States as though we were the primary problem in the world.

He goes on again, talking about what Democrats believe, and he says:

> We proclaim as loudly as we can the utter insanity of nuclear proliferation and the need for a nuclear freeze, if only to affirm the simple truth that peace is better than war because life is better than death.

Obviously there is an enormous threat to nuclear proliferation. Obviously it is frightening to all of us to imagine a Khomeini in Iran or a Qadhafi in Libya with nuclear weapons.

The question is in the real world how do you get there? How do you negotiate? How do you talk it out? How do you have real things happen?

Under the Carter-Mondale foreign policy, a policy of weakness and appeasement, the Soviets so misunderstood what the United States stood for that they invaded Afghanistan thinking we did not matter. The Iranians so misunderstood what the United States stood for that they took over an American Embassy and held it for over a year becasue they thought we did not matter. The Communists extended their grip in Nicaragua and refused to hold the free elections that they had promised and began a guerrilla war in El Salvador.

The North Vietnamese Communists extended their fighting throughout Cambodia.

Under the Carter-Mondale administration American weakness led to more death, not more life. It led to more slavery, not more freedom. It led to the horrors we are now seeing in Afghanistan where literally thousands and thousands of people have been killed.

So I would suggest that the issue is not whether you are for life or death. In a speech that was ostensibly rational, that is an incredibly emotional option. The question is how do you achieve life. Do you achieve life through weakness, through appeasement, through avoiding any kind of confrontation under any circumstances, or do you achieve life through strength, through purposefulness and by clearly communicating what you stand for to your competitors?

Finally, two last points. A brief one, Governor Cuomo referred to "the last 4 years of stagnation."

Again, that simply is not true. We are in the middle of a recovery which is the strongest job recovery in post-World War II America. We have created by now I believe the figure is in excess of 7 million new jobs. We are at a point where unemployment has dropped lower than it was when the Carter-Mondale administration left office and we have done it without rekindling the fires of inflation.

You can read all of Governor Cuomo's speech, all of the speeches at the Democratic National Convention and it is as though there was never a Carter-Mondale administration. You will never hear a single Democrat get up and talk proudly of the 21-percent interest rates under Carter-Mondale. You will never hear a single Democrat get up and talk proudly about the 13-percent inflation that was destroying the American economy under Carter-Mondale. You will never hear a single Democrat get up and talk proudly about the collapse of the American Midwest under Carter-Mondale.

It was under Carter-Mondale that the auto industry collapsed. It was under Carter-Mondale that the steel industry collapsed. Michigan, Ohio, western Pennsylvania, Buffalo, New York, all of those areas decayed under Carter-Mondale.

Now the recovery is finally starting and Governor Cuomo has the gall to suggest, to say flatly that it is the last 4 years that have been stagnation. Oh, no, that is simply not true.

We took over an absolute disaster in the beginning of 1981. The Carter-Mondale legacy of high taxation, high interest rates, high inflation had crushed the American economy. In the last 3 years we have gotten our house in order well enough that we now have a strong, solid recovery and some people are even beginning to suggest that that recovery might go on into 1985 and 1986 and beyond.

And if we have sound fiscal policies and we do not raise taxes massively like Mondale is promising, I think that recovery may go on.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. GINGRICH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think it is well to point out that as we are speaking on the floor this afternoon, this is a day when we had an announcement that the economy's growth during the 2d quarter was at a level far higher than anybody had predicted, that the economy grew at a 7.5-percent annualized level during the 2d quarter.

Once again, all of the so-called experts and pundits were totally shocked by the growth of the economy.

The gentleman is absolutely correct in stating that many people now believe that the economy is going to continue to be robust throughout the rest of this year and into the next year, that both business and consumer spending are at a remarkably high level, which means that more and more people are going to be put to work. So the Democrats are not going to want to talk about 7.5 percent unemployment under the Carter-Mondale administration either. The point is that throughout the Democratic Convention we heard a lot of talk about the fact that this was only a temporary recovery. That was the way in which they characterized the present state of affairs to get the problem of good economic news off their back.

They said, well, it may look good right now but we all know that it is going to look awfully bad in a matter of just a few weeks or a few months.

The fact is that the figures out just today show that to be a falsehood as well. We have a recovery which is proceeding very, very robustly and can be expected to carry forth for a number of months ahead.

I thank the gentleman for yielding again.

Mr. GINGRICH. I think the gentleman's point is correct. Maybe one of the reasons they kept talking about the temporary recovery was because they knew Mondale was going to promise a massive tax increase. And maybe their entire strategy is if they win they will prove Reagan was not succeeding by taxing the American public so heavily that we resume the Carter-Mondale tradition of economic collapse. And they may know something that you and I do not know.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield further, if Mondale is not elected we can assume that the House of Representatives will try to impose those taxes anyhow to try to stem off the recovery. They are not about to lose an election and then allow this recovery to go on. They have been trying to get those taxes increased around here ever since you and I have been here.

I do not find Walter Mondale's statement at all out of line with what we have heard constantly on this floor. All we ever hear from the Democrats on the floor is to cut the deficit by raising taxes, and that is entirely consistent with the party policies that we have seen around here.

Mr. GINGRICH. It is fascinating to read all of their talk about the deficit. They say in their platform "We oppose the artificial and rigid constitutional restraint of a balanced budget amendment."

In other words, the one thing the American people have rallied to, which is clearly the liberal Democrats in the House are not going to balance the budget, and therefore we should pass a constitutional amendment, the one thing that we could vote on this year that would genuinely constrain us, they are not going to be for. The one thing that the American people do not want, which is the massive tax increases they are for.

Mr. WALKER. Is the gentleman saying that in the party platform which supposedly expresses traditional American values that the Democratic Party came out against a balanced budget?

Mr. GINGRICH. The Democratic Party specifically is opposed to a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget.

Mr. WALKER. Which you and I know is absolutely essential if we are ever going to effect the discipline which will allow this House and even our brethren in the other body to get to the point that we will approve a balanced budget and have a balanced budget as a part of the operational mechanism of the Government.

Mr. GINGRICH. It is absolutely fascinating if you look at the combined deficit figures and the Federal Government on the one hand and the State and local governments on the other, living in the same country with the same economy that at the present time State and local governments, most of which have a limit on how much they can spend, are running a massive surplus, something like $70 billion or $80 billion in surplus while the Federal Government, which has no limit on what it can spend, is running a deficit.

Now the lesson I would learn from that is that a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget would force precisely the changes which the liberal Democrats claim they favor but, in fact, are absolutely opposed to in terms of constitutional reform.

Mr. WALKER. I think if the gentleman will yield further, it is important to recognize that many of those States now running massive surpluses were running massive deficits under the Carter-Mondale administration.

It was not really deficit, they say they simply did not have surpluses and were having to raise taxes in order to keep those budgets balanced because with the economic downturn they found themselves in dire economic straits.

They have been beneficiaries of the growth taking place in the economy; it has produced surpluses in their treasuries because they have the restraint of a balanced budget.

If we would proceed to have the kind of growth within the country that would then get reflected in the Federal budget with us disciplining ourselves through a balanced budget, we too could have surpluses just like they are seeing across the country but it will not be seen so long as the Democrats in this House continue to prepare appropriation bills that spend every dime that we take in, plus some, plus all of the money that we get extra that is achievable because of the growth.

Mr. GINGRICH. I think the gentleman is exactly right. I want to in that sense draw a distinction here between words which are cheap and the passionate oratory which came out of San Francisco about deficits and the fact about this House floor.

Liberal Democrats on the House floor vote again and again for more spending. They are consistently ranked by the National Taxpayers Union as big spenders, they have a habit and the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee certainly fits this pattern; the record is clear that for all their talk about deficits what they mean when they say deficit is they are going to raise our taxes.

They do not mean they are going to control spending; they do not mean they are going to reform waste; they mean they are going to raise taxes.

Mr. WALKER. By far the best example of that was the other day when we had a very unusual event, when our colleague from California, Mr. LUNGREN, came to the floor and said there was a $20 million item down in a bill to build a Federal building out in his district that was not needed.

He said we do not need the building. He offered an amendment to take it out, saying, "Let's get rid of this building and save at least $20 million." The liberal Democrats lined up and voted in favor of a building that the Congressman from the district said was not needed and he did not want.

Mr. GINGRICH. You are right. It is probably a classic case in American government in that here you had a gentleman who actually got up and said, "The Government wants to build a building in my district. Far from wanting the pork barrel I have looked at it, I do not think we need it, I am willing to give it up. I will go home and take the heat, we can save $20,000,000."

At which point the liberal Democrats said, "Oh, my goodness, don't do that; build it even if you don't need it, build it now." I thought it a classic case. If someone studies the voting record on that particular amendment, they will discover that virtually every liberal Democrat who runs around worrying about the deficit, voted in favor of spending that extra $20 million even over the opposition of the man whose district the building would be put in.

Let me finally turn to, I thought, a beautiful section Governor Cuomo had about the family. He said, "The idea of family, mutuality, the sharing of benefits and burdens for the good of all." He went on to say, "We believe we must be the family of America."

Now, I want to make a clear case and we hope in the near future to spend more time on this and Congresswoman BOBBY FIEDLER of Los Angeles has done some tremendous work in this area as has Bruce Chapman down at the White House, former Director of the Budget.

Let me make this case, because just as I think in his earlier assertion that it was Democrats in Government who had carried Americans to new levels of affluence, Governor Cuomo stated more than he meant to.

Liberal Democrats genuinely believe in the Government as the replacement for the family, that in fact the Government can step in and do for the family what the family cannot do for itself; that in fact the Government in the end is better than the family, that when in doubt it is the Government bureaucracy and not the family which should make the decisions.

The result is stronger and stronger Government and weaker and weaker families.

It is a frightening thing to realize that for example last year for one group of Americans only 45 percent of their children were born into homes that had fathers living there, only 45 percent.

It is a frightening thing to realize that the welfare state has lured more and more young girls into pregnancy while teenagers, has given them free housing, free food stamps, free medical care, but left them trapped. It is a frightening thing to look at the statistics on the impact of the welfare state on the whole concept of the family.

And it is no accident that Walter Mondale, when he was a Senator in the early 1970's, did a great deal to pass the kind of Government liberal welfare state bureaucracy which cripples and ultimately erodes and indeed destroys the family.

The challenge I would raise is simple: While those of us who want to build a conservative opportunity society believe in the family, the liberal welfare state advocates, liberal Democrats believe in the Government as family, believe in the Government as nurturer, believe in the Government as the agency to take over and ultimately to preside over things which historically the family did.

And in the near future I hope to have the time to bring to the House's attention the pioneering work done by Congresswoman FIEDLER and by Mr. Chapman and the recent writing by a number of scholars which proves conclusively that one of the byproducts of the liberal welfare state is to separate males from their responsibility; to encourage male irresponsibility, and as a result to encourage female deprivation, because again and again it is the male who walks off and it is the female who is left behind with the children.

And the hard lesson we are learning, which I fear Governor Cuomo had not yet learned, is that the Government and the State are not a substitute for a real family; that no matter how many bureaucrats you hire, no matter how many agencies you set up, no matter how many free goods and services you create, they do not replace the family; that there are spiritual, mental, moral things, goods, attitudes, behaviors which would come only from a family environment and the destruction of the family in that setting by the welfare state and the encouragement of more and more young people to end up in situations where they are trapped, where the children will grow up without their fathers, where the fathers are taught to be irresponsible and where the mothers are being trapped into proverty; is a direct consequence of liberal welfare state ideas which in the end did not work.

I have personally recently had two different public housing authorities from two different towns in my district tell me of young girls who walked in and said, "We want to live in your housing authority." And they were told, "Well, you have no children, you have no family; you would be very far down on the waiting list." And both housing authority directors told me in separate stories the girls promptly laughed and said, "We know how to go to the top of the waiting list." And they said, "What do you mean?" And the girls said, "It is simple, if we get pregnant and we have no father you have to give us housing."

Those stories sound incredible. I have permission and will bring to the floor later letters from the housing directors citing the date, not using the name of the young ladies but saying,

"What can we do when the liberal welfare state of Carter-Mondale, of Governor Cuomo, creates an environment in which 14-, 15-, and 16-year-old girls are learning through the grapevine that if you want to move out of your house and away from your mom and your dad, if you want to go out and be on your own and be an important person, if you want to get away from all those nasty teachers in the high school, all you got to do is get pregnant and the Government will take care of you."

Lest you think I exaggerate, as I said a few minutes ago, the level of male irresponsibility has gone up dramatically. It has tripled for some American groups in the last 20 years.

That is really what we are talking about. We are not talking about the child, we are not talking about the mother. We are saying that the welfare state now encourages the father to leave his children behind and wander off.

And to do so as often as he can find somebody interested. And the rest of us take care of them. But it does not work. It does not work because money and food stamps and public housing and free health care are not the same as a real family and in the end, it traps the woman. She grows up with three or four children without a high school degree, without a job, without any work experience and suddenly at 25 we have a single head-of-household female, a mom with no helper and she is not employable and we have a whole new set of opportunities for the welfare state to begin to try to correct the problem the welfare state created.

And so when Governor Cuomo says that the Democrats see the family in this sense we believe we must be the family of America, he is precisely wrong because Government cannot be the family of America. The most Government can do is create conditions that help families and that may explain in closing why, for example, Bradley-Gephardt, which is the liberal Democratic tax reform proposal, in effect, punishes children. It gives twice as big a tax deduction for adults as it does for children, at a time when the deduction for children has declined dramatically because of inflation from what it was under Harry Truman. When the Kemp-Kasten bill would double the deduction for children, the liberal Democratic version would leave it at far too low a number. And, in effect, would discriminate against young people and children.

So I think as you look at the lessons of San Francisco it is very clear that it was an emotional meeting, it was an exciting meeting, the speeches were emotionally brilliant, there were times when they were just plain wrong factually, there were times when they were out of context. There was a remarkable lack of going back to the Carter-Mondale ticket. It is amazing how often they got all the way back to Franklin Roosevelt, but they managed to miss the Carter-Mondale administration. There was not a single reference to the record of 1980, to the unemployment, to the inflation, to the pain, to the fear. It is as though Mondale was not the second half of the Carter-Mondale ticket, as though there had been no Democratic Party in charge of the House for the last 30 years. There was not a single reference to the role of Democrats in Congress in creating the deficit. At least I challenge my good friends on the left to find me—because I did not watch the whole convention—but I have not yet found—and I would be delighted if they would bring one—any reference to the possibility that when they have controlled the House for 30 years they had some responsibility.

There was an absurd emphasis on Washington's role in world tensions and a dramatic understatement of the role of the Soviet Union, of Khomeini in Iran, of Qadhafi in Libya and of the threats we face around the world from terrorism and from communism.

In that sense I think this is a convention well worth looking at in some detail and in the next few days I hope to take several more opportunities to look at specific speeches and to look at the platform and to place them in historic setting.

CHECKOFF FUND

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I hope our colleagues going to the Dallas nominating convention will get the same lift to their spirits as I did from the convention just held in San Francisco. We are demonstrating to the world the glories of political freedom in these United States of America. How powerful and precious are our voting rights and our secret balloting system.

One of our last actions before we recessed for the Fourth of July celebrations and the Democratic Convention, was to pass H.R. 5950 which increased the Federal contribution to our quadrennial political party Presidential nominating conventions. Our primary purpose in passing that bill was increased security for those conventions. The price of liberty is eternal vigilance. I voted for it.

The dollars needed for that security came from the Presidential election campaign fund. That fund gets its moneys from the 25 to 28 percent of the taxpayers who, annually and voluntarily, choose to check the appropriate place on their income tax form which says they allocate $1—or $2 if the return is for man and wife—for the Presidential election campaign fund. The tax funds so allocated are then taken from the general revenues and can be used only for the Federal political process.

Mr. Speaker, we are now authorizing the operating costs of the Federal Election Commission directly from general revenues. The Commission's primary purpose is to protect our Federal political process from taint or corruption. Just as we can allocate a sum from the income tax checkoff fund for security at national political conventions, we can allocate a sum from that fund to pay the operating costs of the Commission.

The Federal Election Commission estimates that the balance remaining in the check-off fund after the 1984 campaign will be approximately $100 million. They also estimate that an additional $35 to $40 million annually will be added to the fund through 1988. The fund is taking in approximately twice what it is spending. There are more than ample funds to pay the approximately $13 million needed annually for operation of the Commission.

Mr. Speaker, if we pay for the operating costs of the Commission from the income tax check-off fund, those sums will no longer have to be taken from the general revenues. Our Federal deficit will be that much less than it is.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, to reduce the Federal deficit, and the debt which mortgages our children's future, I introduced H.R. 3639 which provides for funding of the Federal Election Commission from amounts designated for the Presidential election campaign fund.

Reducing our deficit and debt provides us greater economic security. Taxpayers will appreciate that security as much as we appreciate the security provided our national party conventions.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the same speed and effective dispatch for H.R. 3639 as we gave H.R. 5950. We have everything to gain and nothing to lose from its early enactment.●

HIGH INTEREST RATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, at the end of the session, before we adjourned for the Fourth of July and Democratic National Convention, I placed into the RECORD, for the first time without actually delivering on the House floor because of the lateness of the hour, reference to the subject matter that has monopolized the time that I have felt it necessary, almost compulsory, to address the House and my colleagues with respect to what I consider to be the most critical and crucial issue facing the American people and for which they have suffered and will continue to suffer and endangering the entire economic structure and well being of the traditional American standard of living that has so much eroded comparatively with other nations internationally and comparatively internally, domestically.

The prime and the most immediate cause of course are the exactions through what we call interest rates, usurious, absolutely unjust, uncalled for, and detrimental to the well being of every single economic component of our country.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs, I have repeatedly called the attention of my colleagues to the fact that there is such an intimate relationship between the soft underbelly of our economy and such things as the home construction and such things as business ventures. And the highest rate of business closings, bankruptcies, have been recorded in just the last year, outpeaking the highest rate of the Depression, the rate of bankruptcies.

True, when we make comparisons, they tend to be odious because our country, during the Depression period, was a lot smaller. So, therefore, we can reasonably assume and sort of extrapolate these figures to prove one thing or another.

The fact that is inescapable is that these usurious exactions by way of interest rates cannot continue much longer without irreparable, irreversible damage to the economy and to the standard of living of America.

At no time in the history of mankind has any society been able to survive in a viable way economically, socially, and otherwise with usury and with what I call absolutely unconscionable rates of interest.

In the type of society and economy that we have structured, particularly since World War II, high interest rates are not only corrosive, they are destructive because on the premise, what I call the two-legged stool that was the American economy, mass production based on mass consumption, we had immediately after World War II the greatest development known to man in mass credit. But mass credit predicated on very low and reasonable interest rates.

Interest rates is a mechanism by which the wealth of a society is transferred. There is no other way of describing it, even though to hear the apologists for high interest rates you would think otherwise. But the truth is that interest rates is the mechanism by which the wealth in a society is transferred from individuals and collectivities to collectivities and individuals. At no time in known established human history, no matter what form of government, no matter what form of society and going all the way back to extant human history, the days of the kingdom of Hammurabi to the days even of Jesus Christ, as Jesus Christ lived, there were strong laws against usury, absolute vital strong laws, sometimes punishable by death.

I have had citizen after citizen ask me, citizens ranging all the way from those I met in the adjoining State of Virginia, in my home town, my home State of Texas, in the 17 States that I have taken the subcommittee or myself in behalf of the subcommittee, within the last 3 years, the latest being the State of Alabama, which the subcommittee went to Birmingham in order to hold hearings on the relationship between our housing and urban development programs such as devised and erected by the Congress in the last 30 years and which have been intended for closure and eradication by this administration. And only the will of the Congress has prevented that, even though we have won a marginal victory inasmuch as what we have is a survival of the programs, not a really congressionally intended carrying out of the program.

Interest rates. How come we take for granted now over 17½ percent on long-term, fixed, 30-year mortgage interest rates?

There is no way the average American family can afford to purchase a home this way. We have had hearings recently by the subcommittee on what is known as the adjustable rate mortgages [ARM's], or the ones that were concocted right before the adjustable rates known as graduated payment mortgages. In fact, they were so antagonistic to really providing the means for the average American to buy a home with that down in the grassroots countries they called the graduated payment mortgages gypums, because that is exactly what they were. And all they have done is to postpone the day of atonement, the day that they will have to pay, that little family temporarily being able to get a mortgage, pay that high interest rate which the first year or so has been toned down, reversible rates. But the day of reckoning is here now. So we are again entering an extremely high rate of mortgage foreclosures, exceeding the highest point of the Depression years. So that more than 1 year and 4 months ago, this House passed, after our insistence on the subcommittee, what we called the Home Mortgage Assistance Act, emergency act, if you please. We managed to pass it out in May of last year, 1983, overwhelmingly, by more than a 115-vote margin, despite strong, solid opposition by the administration and the minority party of this House decided to vote, with very few exceptions, along party lines.

What is that? It is languishing in the Senate, where the Senate leadership, controlled by the administration, is letting it die on the vine. In the meanwhile, just a little bit of a lifeline that this represents—it was not even what I think we would and should have done, because it provides for repayment at a higher interest rate that I think is conscionable. Yet something is better than nothing. And the very same opponents were saying that this kind of program should not be provided an average American family, whose only identification with its country is a little lot and home that it could call its own, that it was wrong, was spendthrift. But those same voted for $8 billion for the International Monetary Fund so that it could provide 50-year loans at below 3-percent interest rates to some foreign country that cannot even pay the interest on its loans to our own bankers that are now threatening the whole system, our whole banking system.

Now, there are those who say, "Do not be an alarmist, because this will trigger something horrible." But what is going to happen when we have a rerun, except multiplied by a couple of times, what has happened already with the Continental Illinois Bank? What is going to happen? Nobody wants to ask because everybody is scared stiff that they do not know what to do.

Some of us have been talking on this matter for more than 17 years, anticipating this very thing. What nobody talks about at this point is the concomitant high interest rates over which we have no power to control because it is an international force over which we have absolutely no power. And that is what some people call our balance of trade deficit. One depends on the other, the reason we have reached not only the most monstrous deficit rate—forget about that—but the highest and the most gigantic international trade deficit. Now, this we cannot piddle around with. And yet you do not hear anybody in or out of the Congress, in or out of the White House, even discussing it, other than to say, "It will turn around."

But why? Because the high interest rates have reached such a flagrant state of injustice that even the European industrialized nations have protested in vain to our leaders to do something about it. In the meanwhile, the idea is rampant and had been for years that there is nothing you can do about interest rates, that interest rates are like an act of God.

I have had three Federal Reserve Board Chairmen come in and talk that way to the committee I belong to, which is the Banking Committee that I have had the honor to belong to since I have been here, 22½ years. So I think I know I have heard all of the economists of any note, I have heard three Federal Reserve Board Chairmen. But what are they? Are they amenable to the American people? Absolutely not. The Federal Reserve Board is not a Federal entity, it is not a Federal agency, it is a private ongoing concern now thoroughly in the hands of seven of the largest banks in our country that have been so injudicious that they have gone out and loaned more than their total assets, their capitalization structure, to countries that cannot even pay the interest on those loans. So who is bailing them out now? The taxpayer of this country. At what rates? At rates that in the meanwhile are strangling enterprise.

There is no businessman that I know—and I know many—who can afford to go out at more than 18 percent and borrow even $3,000 to sort of improve their inventory for their little business. I do not know of any that can do that for long, much less over a period of a year or two. And yet this is exactly what is flagellating our country. And do you mean to tell me that nothing can be done about it? Prior Congresses have. Prior Presidents have. But one thing that they did not have was to let these forces take over the economic, the fiscal, the monetary destiny of a country. This has always been the issue since the beginning of our Nation when we had the First Continental Congress, the First and the Second. That was the issue, the creation of the North American Bank and the chartering of it and what the interest would be allowable that those bankers could charge.

Thomas Jefferson fulminated in language that today is considered a lot stronger than any that is being used in the modern world against those interests. He knew that those interests through time immemorial and up to today have only one single loyalty, and that is certainly not to the greatest interest of the greatest number of the country. Yet that is what is in control today. For the first time we have allowed those interests to take over the economic, the fiscal and the monetary destinies of this country, without being accountable to the American people, because the Federal Reserve Board in turn is not accountable the way it is operating now and the way the Congresses have let it. The Congress created the Federal Reserve Board, yet, in speaking to the majority of my colleagues and to the chairmen who have come over and talked to us from the Federal Reserve Board, you would think that the Federal Reserve Board was an entity that was independent and must have been created in some heavenly action not amenable to control by the President, not accountable to the Congress. But the Congress has the means. It created the Federal Reserve Board. It certainly can control its own creation if it once divests itself of the myth of so-called independence of the Federal Reserve Board that it has got to be so independent that it is unaccountable.

You have had things that have been downright wrong and criminal happen in the deliberations and actions of the Federal Reserve Board that have damaged—they have damaged—the economy and, moneywise, the taxpayer. Yet there is no Inspector General over there, they do not allow any audit by the Congress because the Congress has been pusillanimous and has refused us the bills we have introduced to bring about strict accountability and auditing. There is no country in the world, even in the oldest established institutions in Europe, that conduct their money business this way. The American people have been sold down the river, and the fact that you have usurious, unconscionable exactions by way of interest rates should not be a surprise to anybody.

I have had these businessmen, whether they were the small businessmen I met in Virginia, or in my home State, or in the 17 other States that say, "Hey, Congressman, we always thought there was a law against usury." Well, of course, there used to be; there is not any more. Those who say that a law cannot help, well, let me say, the law does educate. That is why we have laws against murder. That is why we have laws against other crimes. I am sure that when those laws were first drafted, there were those who said that you cannot prohibit such things as murder by law; you cannot pass a law that is going to prohibit murder.

It is the same thing that is being said about high interest rates; usurious interest rates. Not high interest rates; usurious interest rates, that by any prior definition would be considered illegal, and therefore culpable under the criminal statutes.

I say that all of the Federal money, all of the subsidies given business, and there are many; billions of dollars. All of the tax giveaways, especially the one in 1981, the direct, immediate cause of this monstrous fiscal deficit. All of those I can give them back if you will just give me a strong, anti-usury law at 6 percent.

We have advocated, as well as have spoken out against this at times where there was absolutely nobody predicting such interest rates as would exceed 10 percent even. It was unthought of just 15 years ago. In fact, just 12 years ago. Some of us were speaking out because it was obvious, you do not have to be an expert. You do not have to be a banker; you do not have to be a big financial expert or economist of high regard to know that if, if, the most priceless ingredient of all, that is, the element by which the wealth of a nation is transferred is not controlled in the public interest by somebody, and our Constitution says that should be us: The Representatives of the very same people that have been stripped naked of all protection.

There is no question in my mind that business cannot flourish, no matter what delusions of the moment are propagated. That individuals cannot prosper and flourish with usury. No country has, and no country ever will. We have advocated some specific acts that the Congress could take. We hope that somehow before crisis, remember times of crisis do not bring forth temperate, judicious legislation. There is time, maybe, maybe not. I fear that right now it is a rat race between this house of cards, internationally speaking, collapses, before November 6, or maybe it will hold out until a little after November 6.

It is a force that we now can no longer control. What will happen in these other countries will inescapably impact us, and we will have very little power now. We have sold out our last leverage that we had a few years ago, that some of us were actually on this House floor and on the record advocating our then leadership take to prevent the very processes that have set in now.

As I say and repeat, there never has been a time when I have spoken critically without some recommendation as to what can be done. Some constructive, some creative action that is feasible, that is constitutional, that can and should be taken. I say to my colleagues, those particularly that will be reading these remarks in the RECORD, that I would intend to follow through on this with more specific details as I did in the last RECORD of the last day we were in session before we adjourned, which the end of June past.

There I did not utter for the first time those words on the floor; they were prepared. I had an opportunity to prepare them, unify them, and present them in writing for the RECORD. So they are what I call "bullet-marked." To those of my colleagues that have contacted me in the past with respect to this issue, I suggest please read those remarks, and then if you are interested, let us get together.

I think that no political party, whether it is the in's or the out's are showing any kind of visible signs of addressing this issue. The Congress has the responsibility; it is inescapably ours. The Congress has not risen to the occasion. So, therefore, if the peoples' Representatives do not rise to the occasion, who else?

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS BY SHERIFF LARRY WHITTEN

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, this past Memorial Day, Sheriff Larry Whitten of Camden County, MO, gave a speech at the National Cemetary in Jefferson City. I was very impressed with Sheriff Whitten's thoughts on patriotism and our fight to keep our freedom. I urge my colleagues here in the House to take the time to read this fine speech:

MEMORIAL DAY SERVICE, JEFFERSON CITY, MO, MAY 28, 1984

On November 19, 1863 President Lincoln said, "It is for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that the Government of people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

When President Lincoln said these words at the Gettysburg Address, it was his challenge to the American people to dedicate and to consecrate themselves towards fulfilling this great task that had only begun, "Lest these die in vain."

Looking back at the supreme sacrifices that had been made then, and the thousands that have been made since then to preserve this freedom and this way of life, that challenge given so many years ago, is just as real and just as imperative today as it was in 1863, when Lincoln gave that Address.

We only need to look at the number of neighboring countries that have fallen into the grips of Communism in the last decade to realize that challenge is still very real to us today as the American people.

We only have to listen quietly to the voices from Pearl Harbor, the Sands of Iwo Jima, the Shores of Normandy, the Oceans of the South Pacific, Korea, the Jungles of Viet Nam, Grenada and Beirut. The voices would be saying, "Tell them about us, Whitten, lest we die in vain; lest we die in vain."

Tell who, lest these die in vain? I, as many others, have a hard time trying to explain to the youth, why we fought in Viet Nam. I try to use the analogy that Communism is like a fire. My neighbor up at the end of the block calls and says, "Whitten, my house is on fire, I need help." "I know your house is dirty, corrupt and besides it is nothing to me anyway." The fire spreads to the next house and they call me for help and I say, "I am too busy, besides it is none of my business." In a short time the fire has spread over the entire block, including my house. We must understand no man is an island, what we do or fail to affects all others.

That is why we fought in Viet Nam. From time to time we may have fought the wrong way, but at least we fought and we tried for the cause that we so strongly believed in.

Tell who, lest these die in vain? What is our most valuable, natural resource? Our youth is our best resource, but it is like clay or raw material, it must be molded and fashioned into our heritage. Just as our forefathers molded us into the principles of truth and freedom.

We have to understand that sacrifice is the common thread that weaves us all together. As General Douglas MacArthur said, "First must come duty, honor and country," and I believe this sacrifice must be woven into those three; lest these die in vain.

We are fast becoming a country of "me only attitude." John F. Kennedy said, "Ask not what your Country can do for you, but what you can do for your Country."

Whoever told us that Freedom was free? We only have to listen to the distant voices to know that freedom has been bought and paid for with the supreme sacrifices. If we look at history, we know that this freedom that we enjoy is again going to have to be paid for.

It seems that we are not passing onto our youth, that with Rights and Freedom also comes responsibility. Freedom does not and cannot endure without maintenance, no more than your car or your lawn mower does.

St. Paul of Old said to the Corinthians, "We are bought with a price." As Americans we too have been bought with a great price. The liberties we enjoy, the freedoms and the prosperity have been bought and paid for by the courage, daring and faith of the men and women who in every generation have answered their country's call.

Not only the call to arms, but the call to build and to create—the call to develop character and moral ideas, and practice them in their everyday walk of life.

Each time I hear the Star Spangled Banner, I get cold chills up my spine, and as I watch the raising of the Stars and Stripes the tears come into my eyes. Yet many times I see men that don't even remove their hats. I see children that don't even understand the sign of what it means. Along that line, I am reminded of the words of Sir Francis Butler, when he said, "The Nation that will insist on drawing a broad line of demarcation between the fighting man and the thinking man is liable to find it's fighting done by fools and it's thinking done by cowards. We have to think and act in the American Tradition."

Our youth is our Resource. We must teach them as our forefathers taught us, if we are to continue to enjoy the freedoms that have so long been our heritage. We cannot leave it up to others to do it or it will never get done. We must realize that each time a youth from our community, from our country, goes wrong he/she is our kid, our youth and we too are partially to blame. We must believe and act on the principle that if our youth today are not taught the responsibilities of our heritage, then we are to blame, either for what we did do or what we failed to do. I understand that President Truman had a sign on his desk that said, "The Buck stops here."

The pursuit of freedom and justice has taken our flag to the far corners of the world and back. It flew beside buildings at Ellis Island as millions of immigrants came to our shores to escape poverty and political oppressions, seeking freedom and opportunity in the land that became the "Last, best hope of mankind."

This is the heritage which you and I have received. It is the heritage which we must transmit to our children and our youth. It is not just facts, figures and dates, it is a deeply rooted sense of loyalty to all that have gone before—the challenges, the trials, the stoutheartedness, the victories, the dedication of the past.

Lincoln also said at that Address, "The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but can never forget what they did." Was Lincoln wrong; have we as a people forgotten those deeds that so many have done on the battlefields both near and far and the sacrifices made at home? Will the glory, honor and heroism of one age always become dim memories to a later generation?

It will unless we carry on the tradition, and we take it to the next step to teach our youth this honor, this tradition and this heritage.

Tell who: tell our youth, teach our youth; lest these die in vain; lest these die in vain.

ALICE FAIRFAX WINS 4-H ALUMNI AWARD

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to recognize an outstanding community leader in Missouri's Fourth District. Alice Fairfax, winner of Missouri's State 4-H Alumni Award for 1983, has been an energetic leader and participant in her local community for more than 25 years. I believe she exemplifies the dedication and service to her neighbors which continues to keep this Nation strong.

Mrs. Fairfax's adult 4-H career began as a 4-H club leader, assistant leader and project leader. She has also been chairman of the Pettis County 4-H Achievement Day judging contests for several years. In 1982-83, she became chairman of the Pettis County 4-H 500 program.

Further, Mrs. Fairfax's interests have not been limited to 4-H work. Her service has touched all areas of the community. In addition to her duties as a wife and mother of three, Mrs. Fairfax has given her time to State leadership by participating as a Democrat Committee Woman, vice-chairman of the University of Missouri's State Advisory Council, and as a delegate to the National Convention from Missouri in 1976. As evidenced by her impressive list of activities, Alice Fairfax continues to be a responsible and beneficial educational, political, and civic leader in Missouri.

It is with great admiration that I commend Mrs. Fairfax for her unending hard work. Her actions have always been for the benefit of those around her and I am proud to bring her praiseworthy service to light. Every city needs people with Mrs. Fairfax's expert services and her sense of devotion to the community. I join with my fellow citizens of the Fourth District to applaud and congratulate Alice Fairfax.●

U.S. POLICY ON TORTURE—HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 605

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, 45 colleagues joined me in cosponsoring House Joint Resolution 605, regarding the implementation of the policy of the U.S. Government in opposition to the practice of torture by any foreign government. Senator PERCY has introduced an identical resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 320, in the Senate.

The resolution reaffirms the U.S. position opposing torture and sets forth guidelines to implement U.S. policy to combat that abusive practice. Torture, the most abhorrent of human rights violations, is regularly practiced in over 60 countries.

House Joint Resolution 605 is an initial step toward addressing the problem. The resolution delineates specific guidelines to help shape our policy toward combatting the practice of torture around the world. The prescriptives set forth in the resolution should help sensitize governments and officials, both here and abroad, to the reprehensible use of torture. Further, the resolution underscores our commitment to the elimination of torture.

In view of Amnesty International's efforts to highlight awareness of this widespread and systematic abuse, and the hearings on torture conducted by the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, it is appropriate that we now enunciate U.S. policy on this serious issue. I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to the text of the resolution, which follows, and encourage all Members of the House to join me in cosponsoring this measure.

H.J. RES. 605

Joint resolution regarding the implementation of the policy of the United States Government in opposition to the practice of torture by any foreign government

Whereas internationally recognized nongovernmental human rights organizations and international human rights organizations have investigated and reported in detail on the systematic use of torture in more than sixty countries;

Whereas the Department of State has also reported in its annual country reports on human rights practices that this gross violation of internationally recognized human rights is occurring;

Whereas torture knows no ideological boundaries and is practiced in countries in every region of the world;

Whereas torture is absolutely prohibited by international legal standards;

Whereas in those countries where torture is practiced systematically, it is possible to identify laws, institutions, and other forms of political organization that contribute to the practice and allow its continuation;

Whereas legal, medical, religious, and other groups seeking to combat torture emphasize that access to detainees, the civil and criminal prosecution of torturers, and the rehabilitation of victims of torture are critical steps in reducing the practice and effects of torture;

Whereas the United States Government has supported the work of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in developing the draft Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment which is intended to reduce the practice of torture and lead to its eventual abolition, and the United States Government is supportive of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture; and

Whereas the good will of the peoples of the world toward the United States can be increased when the United States distances itself from the practice of torture by governments friendly to the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress reaffirms that it is the continuing policy of the United States Government to oppose the practice of torture by foreign governments through public and private diplomacy and, when necessary and appropriate, through the enactment and vigorous implementation of laws intended to reinforce United States policies with respect to torture. The United States Government opposes acts of torture wherever they occur, without regard to ideological or regional considerations, and will make every effort to work cooperatively with other governments and with nongovernmental organizations to combat the practice of torture worldwide.

SEC. 2. (a) The President is requested—

(1) to instruct the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations to continue to raise the issue of torture practiced by governments; and

(2) to continue to involve the United States Government in the formulation of international standards and effective implementing mechanisms, particularly the draft Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

(b) In order to implement the policy expressed in the first section of this resolution, the Secretary of State is requested to issue formal instructions to each United States chief of mission regarding United States policy with respect to torture, including—

(1) instructions—

(A) to examine allegations of the practice of torture, particularly allegations concerning the existence of secret detention, extended incommunicado detention, and restrictions on access by family members, lawyers, and independent medical personnel to detainees; and

(B) to forward such information as may be gathered, including information regarding any efforts made by the host government to reduce and eliminate the practice of torture, to the Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs for analysis in preparing the Department's annual country reports on human rights practices;

(2) in the case of a chief of mission assigned to a country where torture is regularly practiced, instructions to report on a periodic basis as circumstances require to the Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs regarding efforts made by the respective United States diplomatic mission to implement United States policy with respect to combating torture;

(3) instructions to meet with indigenous human rights monitoring groups knowledgeable about the practice of torture for the purpose of gathering information about such practice; and

(4) instructions to express concern in individual cases of torture brought to the attention of a United States diplomatic mission including, whenever feasible, sending United States observers to trials when there is reason to believe that torture has been used against the accused.

(c) The Secretary of Commerce should continue to enforce vigorously the current restrictions on the export of crime control equipment pursuant to the Export Administration Act of 1979.

(d) The heads of the appropriate departments of the United States Government that furnish military and law enforcement training to foreign personnel, particularly personnel from countries where the practice of torture has been a documented concern, shall include in such training, when relevant, instruction regarding international human rights standards and the policy of the United States with respect to torture.●

A TRIBUTE TO ROGER BODMAN

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure and great pride that I wish to recognize the professional achievements of a former member of my staff and good personal friend Roger Bodman of New Jersey. This special recognition comes at a time when Roger is just completing his term as commissioner of New Jersey's Department of Labor. Roger leaves this post with praise from all sides for his efforts.

During his tenure, Roger succeeded in strengthening the department's capabilities and financial efficiency. Also under his stewardship, New Jersey enacted an unemployment insurance reform, completed the computerization and automation of unemployment claims processing, and implemented the new Federal Job Training Partnership Act. His has been a highly noteworthy record and one he should be most proud of as the youngest member of the Governor's cabinet. Roger's efforts have established a standard of excellence rarely seen at the labor department.

It is particularly significant to note that Roger's resume of achievements began long before his appointment to the Kean administration.

Roger began his public career straight out of college as an assistant to my colleague, former Congresswoman Millicent Fenwick. In 1977 he served my friend former Senator Ray Bateman in his statewide bid. In 1978, when I sought a congressional seat, it was Roger Bodman's keen political sense and tactical expertise that guided my campaign to success. He then came to Washington with me and served as my top aide for which I will always be grateful.

As we know, Roger's love for the management of political campaigns brought him back to New Jersey for his toughest fight—Tom Kean's successful gubernatorial race. Based on his past record, I have occasionally referred to Roger as the best political strategist in the State. While I am obviously biased in my assessment of his abilities, Roger's record speaks for itself. It is evidence I think of an extremely talented individual.

On a personal note, Roger has been a trusted friend, confidant, and supporter. He has my total faith and most of all my respect. Of course, I am delighted he has chosen to assume his new position, which, I'm sure, will be added to the list of his many fine achievements in November.

In short, I offer my congratulations to him for his fine service as labor commissioner.●

FAIR TRADE IN STEEL ACT, H.R. 5081

HON. STAN LUNDINE

OF NEW YORK

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, today, I am joining 207 of my colleagues in the House to cosponsor H.R. 5081, the Fair Trade in Steel Act. This has not been an easy decision for me, and this bill is not a panacea for what ails the U.S. steel industry. It does, however, address the serious crisis which exists today in the U.S. steel industry and indeed throughout industrial America with strong and meaningful actions.

As recent as the 1960's the United States dominated world steel production. Today, foreign steel producers control over 20 percent of our own domestic market. In the last 4 years, over 200,000 American steel workers have lost their jobs with little hope of returning to them. The steel industry is in desperate need of long-term capital for modernization. At least $60 billion will be needed to return and keep much of our steel capacity competitive over the next 10 years.

The foreign competition in steel is no longer just coming from Europe or from Japan. Significant penetration is coming from Korea, Brazil, Mexico, and Taiwan. These nations all recognize the fundamental importance of steel to their domestic industrial base and to their country's future prosperity. They are going to continue to aggressively pursue expanded markets in this critical sector.

The U.S. steel industry is a key linkage industry in our economy. Over half of our industrial production is dependent on steel in some form or another. In addition, without a viable steel industry, an adequate national defense is not possible.

We simply cannot allow our steel industry to disappear. I believe that the preferred approach to the problems of the steel industry rests in Government, labor, management, and the public interest working together within the framework of a broad industrial strategy to identify the trade actions, regulatory adjustments, financing, and other actions needed to revitalize the steel sector.

I believe that one of the ramifications of the failure of this country to work toward the development and implementation of a coordinated industrial strategy will be pressure on the Congress for more and more trade-protectionist measures. This is true because U.S. industries will have no other recourse as long as the United States continues to ignore the fact that foreign governments are working hand and glove with their industries to establish a competitive edge for their industries.

While interim trade relief will be an important component to a solid future for certain U.S. industries, it is not in our Nation's economic interest to make trade relief the centerpiece of industrial revitalization efforts. Trade policy must be coordinated with other actions to be effective, and trade relief must only be utilized when it is absolutely essential.

As many of you know, I have been a strong advocate for the development of an industrial strategy and have sponsored legislation which has received the endorsement of the House Banking and Energy and Commerce Committees to create a framework for development of that strategy. I believe that enactment of this legislation is an essential step toward revitalization of the steel industry and of other industries facing intense and growing international competition. Unfortunately, the bipartisan support for industrial strategy legislation I and many others in this House have worked hard to create for the past 2 years has not materialized and therefore the chances of its enactment in the near future are currently slim.

Having recognized all this, in the final analysis, we cannot sit idly by while our domestic steel industry disintegrates before our eyes. There is bipartisan support for the Fair Trade in Steel Act, and therefore it is the most feasible vehicle this year for Congress to address in a meaningful way the serious industrial crisis in America's steel sector. The quotas which would be established by this bill can provide valuable time for Government, labor, and managment to create a solid foundation for the American steel industry in the future.

The bill does contain a mechanism which attempts to force development and commitment of a steel industry strategy in exchange for the quotas in the bill. While I am pleased to see this emphasis included in this bill, at the same time, I believe this provision could be strengthened considerably. If this bill does move to the House floor in its current form, I will be seeking to offer an amendment to it which requires development of an explicit industry revitalization plan by Government, management, labor, and the public interest before quotas are established.

This bill is also very relevant to the decision which President Reagan must make by September 24 pursuant to a recent finding by the International Trade Commission of injury to the domestic steel industry from imports. The ITC has recommended a relief program to the President for the steel industry which is very close to the provisions contained in this bill. It is vitally important that the House of Representatives send a clear signal to Mr. Reagan which leaves no doubt of our deep concern about the current plight of the steel industry and of our commitment to act to preserve productive, competitive steel capacity and jobs on U.S. soil.

I urge my colleagues to join this effort in the upcoming weeks and months to put in place a meaningful program to insure a competitive steel sector for our future, and to establish a framework for development of a broader industrial strategy for America's future.●

JESSE JACKSON'S REPUDIATION OF FARRAKHAN

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend Jesse Jackson for his recent repudiation of remarks by Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

Reverend Jackson made a significant step away from the stigma many Americans have placed upon him of being too closely aligned with a racist. The demagoguery of Louis Farrakhan should never have been permitted to become a part of a Presidential campaign.

Jackson's act of moral courage should now bring his campaign back to the issues facing us all. His commendable dedication has been sidetracked by the Farrakhan episode for much too long, and he is now free to present the agenda he originally set out to pursue.

I and many of my colleagues in the Congressional Black Caucus have endorsed the position that racism, bigotry, and intolerance in any form must be condemned. This is regardless of the race, religion, or ethnic background of the purveyor of prejudice.●

IRA'S—THE FACTS RAISE QUESTIONS

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the recent joint conference that resulted in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 specifically dealt with several individual retirement account [IRA] issues. The conferees rejected a provision in the Senate bill that would have expanded the IRA deduction limit for married couples. They also did not agree to a House provision that would have allowed nondeductible IRA contributions to be made up to $1,750 annually without incurring an excise tax penalty. Actually, the only IRA amendments accepted by the conferees dealt with a change in the reporting requirements and a recharacterization of alimony received by a divorced spouse as compensation for IRA purposes.

Perhaps the conferees were sending a signal that Congress should take a longer look at IRA's as a matter of broad tax policy. Possibly they felt that the steamroller of enhanced IRA benefits initiated in 1981 had to stop. And maybe in a time of huge budget deficits, it was a wiser course to limit tax preferences—even widely popular ones—rather than add to their cost.

These were my views as a conferee.

In any event, we are now in a period of transition with IRA's—certainly one where it is appropriate to take stock of what we have now done with them and assess what we should do regarding IRA's in the future.

An important study has just been released that should be required reading by all Members of Congress as they consider the prospects of IRA's down the road. Entitled "Individual Retirement Accounts: Characteristics and Policy Implications," it was issued by the Employee Benefit Research Institute [EBRI] in July 1984. Among its more interesting revelations are the following:

First, obtaining the IRA deduction motivated 53.1 percent of taxpayers choosing IRA's as compared to 38.4 percent who were primarily interested in saving for retirement.

Second, more than half of all funds contributed to IRA's in 1982 came from recycled existing savings while only 43 percent were attributable to an infusion of new funds through earnings or salaries.

Third, more than 16.7 million IRA's were established by the end of 1982 as compared to 1.2 million IRA's as of 1975.

Fourth, the total number of returns with IRA deductions increased from 3,415 in 1981 to 12,098 in 1982; the total value of IRA tax deductions rose from $4.8 billion in 1981 to $28.4 billion in 1982.

Fifth, some experts have projected that under current law, IRA assets could soar to $1 trillion by the year 2000.

With the IRA, we have created a very generous and extremely popular tax shelter. In doing so, Congress made a policy decision that sought to expand savings, reduce the burden of individual taxes and at the same time increase the amount of retirement income available for workers not otherwise participating in employer-sponsored pension plans.

The data provided by the EBRI study raises serious questions about whether the nontax saving assumptions underlying this decision can be supported by the results of actual experience. Furthermore, the study challenges the threshold question of whether we as a nation can afford to subsidize this costly tax preference, or whether there may be a less expensive method of accomplishing the worthwhile objectives of IRA's.

I encourage my colleagues to take the time to review this study, and then search out the answer for themselves.●

REAGAN IS NO ENVIRONMENTALIST

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, during the congressional recess we were treated to the master communicator espousing his great achievements in the area of the environment. Unfortunately, the President's rhetoric does not match his actions. In fact, this administration has been an environmental disaster. Governors Lamm and Earl recently outlined this administration's environmental record in an article published in the New York Times. I would like to submit it for the RECORD.

[From the New York Times, July 2, 1984]

REAGAN'S AIR, WATER POLICY: FOUL

(By Richard D. Lamm and Anthony S. Earl)

DENVER.—President Reagan claims "great progress in cleaning up the air and water." Since when is failure to lead "great progress"?

In December, Christopher DeMuth, a top Presidential appointee in the Office of Management and Budget, wrote a memorandum bemoaning that "in three years we have not advanced a single detailed proposal of our own for reform of any of the major health, safety or environmental" statutes. His concern was that the Administration had not done more to prevent the Government from regulating industry, but his lament could also speak for those concerned with the environmental problems confronting the nation.

While the Administration may have been unable to undermine existing environmental statutes and enforcement agencies, it has done nothing to move forward with environmental protection. Rather than act, it is simply lying low.

For the first two years, the Environmental Protection Agency was a festering scandal, its budget and personnel cut back to levels of 10 years ago—before the E.P.A. had responsibility to deal with hazardous wastes and toxic chemicals. Law enforcement ground to a standstill; 90 percent of the regulatory activities were behind schedule. In an agency never touched by scandal, all but one of the top appointees were fired or forced to resign when one sleazy arrangement, conflict of interest or appalling blunder after another was exposed.

The return of William Ruckelshaus has done much to restore fairness and professionalism—but better-than-awful is not good enough. At a time when pesticide and food laws desperately need reform, he has refused to support proposed legislation to insure that pesticides will be safe for farmers and consumers. He urges that Congress wait until next year.

Although there is broad agreement that the nation must combat acid rain by reducing sulfur emissions from power plants, the Administration refuses to curb this pollution. President Reagan says more study is all that is needed. Maybe next year he will know enough to do what 73 percent of the public wants done now. Then again, maybe not.

Although nearly half of the drinking water supply systems of major cities that draw on ground water contain toxic chemicals, Mr. Ruckelshaus has refused to support legislation that would strengthen the Safe Drinking Water Act. He asks Congress to trust the Administration to act on its own. Perhaps next year.

Although our hazardous-waste sites are leaking toxic chemicals into the earth, water and air, and we have discovered more than 10 times as many sites to be cleaned up as the Superfund can handle, the Administration refuses to move quickly to expand the Superfund. Wait 'til next year.

Although industries release into the air every year more than three billion pounds of 36 chemicals known to be suspected of causing cancer or other chronic diseases, Mr. Ruckelshaus has opposed legislation to strengthen laws dealing with toxic air pollutants and to force the E.P.A. to expedite deciding which pollutants to control and how. He asks that we wait until the agency is ready to act.

All these delays, these entreaties that we wait until next year, smack of politics. As Administrator Ruckelshaus explained, "Given the politicization of [these issues], I am concerned about raising meritorious ideas for fear they'll be discussed in the heat of political battle." But why not have an open debate? One wonders if a Reagan re-election would mean progress or a reversion to the pre-Ruckelshaus days.

At the end of his memo, Mr. DeMuth suggested steps toward "the largest economic gains." Among those were replacement of the environmental laws with "laws that emphasize economic incentives rather than mandatory Federal standards." That recommendation shows why the Reagan Administration is still unable to lead on the evironmental front. From the President on down, its members don't believe that the problems are real. They have sought to deal only with the "problem" of too much regulation, ignoring many critical emerging environmental issues that require action. They have made a stupendous miscalculation about the needs and preferences of the nation.

There can be no higher calling for a political leader than to help society find ways to use our natural resources without destroying them. We wish the President would forego his disdain for regulation long enough to see the tremendous need to protect health and the environment. Then he might better understand why a majority of Americans deeply believe in environmental protection and demand Government involvement in preserving our national heritage of pure water, clean air and unspoiled land.●

THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INVASION OF CYPRUS: JULY 20, 1984

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago, on July 20, 1974, Turkey invaded the island Republic of Cyprus. Twice before, since the republic's founding in 1960, Turkey had prepared for an invasion, once in 1964 and again in 1967. But the invasion of 1974 was an unexpected move, precipitating a momentary crisis in world affairs. The NATO Alliance was thrust into turmoil. The Soviet Union put seven airborne divisions on full alert. The United States dispatched top ranking diplomats to Greece and Turkey. Great Britain evacuated surviving members of the Cypriot Government, and the United Nations convened a special session meeting on the Cyprus question.

The invasion also strangled a 14-year effort to bring peace and unity to the island. Since 1960, when Cyprus was granted its independence from Great Britain, it had struggled heroically to establish a republic in which all Cypriots, both of Greek and Turkish descent, would be free, equal and secure in their homeland.

The NATO crisis dissipated, soon forgotten by American officials embroiled in other problems. Southeast Asia and the Middle East overshadowed the plight of Cyprus. But the invasion's enslavement of the Cypriot dream continues to this day. Ten long years have passed, and the invasion has become an occupation.

In the days that followed the invasion, Cyprus was divided into Greek and Turkish sectors. The northern third of the island, claimed by Turkish Cypriots, was armed by a "Turkish Cypriot Security Force" and cleared of all Greek descendents. More than 200,000 Greek Cypriots became refugees in their own homeland. Fully 2,000 Greek Cypriots have disappeared without a trace. Once vibrant cities became ghost towns and battlefield encampments. Colonists have immigrated from the Turkish mainland, bringing the Turkish population up to 18 percent of the island's total, but they have sealed off fully 40 percent of the island's land. The Turks have established schools, coined money, and made every effort to wipe every trace of the burgeoning Cypriot culture from their stolen land.

Nine months ago, satisfied that their claims would go unquestioned, the Turkish Cypriots declared themselves an independent people, unbeholding to the Greek Cypriots and having nothing to do with a unified Cyprus. The Government of Turkey was the first, and the only nation to recognize this absurd, illegal and saddening declaration. The dream of a unified Cyprus would seem to grow ever fainter.

Last January Mr. Spyros Kyprianou, President of the Republic of Cyprus, submitted to the U.N. Security Council a framework for a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem. It is a document setting forth, with elegant simplicity, the Greek Cypriot's desire to reconcile their differences with their Turkish neighbors. The dream of a unified and independent Cyprus lives on, and President Kyprianou's "framework" is a fair and sincere invitation for the Turkish Cypriots to reunite their war torn island.

The invitation has gone unanswered.

Mr. Speaker, it is time we made clear to Turkey that their intent is clearly understood, and will not be countenanced. The move to establish an separatist "Turkish Cyprus" is a hoax. It is a Trojan—or should I say Turkish Horse; a foothold from which to eradicate Greek Cyprus and absorb the island under Turkish control. Back in 1974, when Turkish Premier Bulent Ecrivet announced the invasion of Cyprus to the world, he thanked the United States for its support. "I am obliged to express my gratitude to all of (Turkey's) friends and allies," he said, "especially to the United States and Britain, with whom we were in close consultation."

Ten years ago we accepted his expression of gratitude because it was assumed that Turkey would withdraw and that Cyprus would be unified once again as an autonomous republic. History has betrayed the error of that assumption. I rise today because it is fitting on this anniversary to remember the Cyprus problem. I urge my colleagues to renew our commitment to a peaceful reunification of a Republic of Cyprus, and to join me on this day of mournful commemoration.●

HONORING OUR NATION'S YOUNG PEOPLE

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, honoring our Nation's young people and their achievements has always been important to me. Today, I am happy to recognize Jeannie Spurling, a young lady from Belle, MO. Jeannie won the State title in the junior division of the National History Day competition with her essay entitled, "St. James Built on a Furnace."

As a young historian, Jeannie has displayed a wonderful knowledge of her subject. In her description of the development and growth of a small Missouri town, I think we can all share the feeling of pride in remembering our heritage. For example, in this passage, Jeannie writes about the settling of St. James:

In the late 1800's, two men named Thomas James and Samuel Massey, would come and change Miramigoua (meaning catfish), which was the Shawnee Indian name given to that land now called Maramec. These two men would change Maramec: from the birds singing to the song of the hammer, from the colors of the turning season to the turning of wagon wheels, from the trees that seem to grasp the sky to the towering of the smokestacks, from the curling smoke of the Indian campfire to the smoke from the bloomery and furnace, from the blend of the colors of nature to the colors of man. These changes were just the beginning of a chain of events that would lead to the building of the community of St. James.

I am proud to congratulate Jeannie Spurling for her winning essay and her writing ability. I think Jeannie exemplifies the optimistic capabilities of the young people in this country. With her ability and her interest, I feel she will continue to follow the winning path.●

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, a tragic accident recently took the life of a young friend and constituent of mine. John Van Nostrand was just approaching the realization of the promise life held for him when he was killed in a freak automobile crash. I wish to share with you, and with my colleagues, this moving tribute to a special young man, in the hope that we can all better appreciate how much life has to offer us each day.

[From the Rolling Stone, June 21, 1984]

JOHN VAN NOSTRAND: JULY 17, 1961–APRIL 15, 1984—HE HAD IT ALL, AND IF HE'D GIVEN THEM A CHANCE, THEY'D HAVE MADE HIM A STAR

(By Joyce Wadler)

He was a great maker of lists—admittedly an unheroic trait—which sometimes indicates a great procrastinator and sometimes indicates a great compulsive. But in his case, it meant a great passion for life, a fear that there was too little time and so many things to do.

Pro tennis player, model, writer—John Van Nostrand did it all; more's the tragedy that he had great promise in them all. Good-looking? At six foot two, with strawberry-blond hair, he had the kind of looks that when he walked through an airline terminal, the girls in the rental booths would turn to stare at him, one after the other, right down the line—pow, pow, pow!—like a row of pins struck by a bowling ball. Pow, pow, pow! He wore a lot of white, he was twenty-two, he had written a screenplay Farrah Fawcett wanted to do, he had been signed by the Los Angeles modeling agency that handled Cheryl Tiegs and Christie Brinkley. They said he had it, he had that something, and if he gave them the time, they could make him a star. The problem was, he loved his tennis more than he wanted to be a star. When the agency got him a Levi's commercial whose shooting schedule conflicted with a tournament in Mexico—which he needed to build up points for Wimbledon—he turned down the commercial.

"One day when I'm old and I tell my grandkids I played professional tennis, they'll ask me if I played Wimbledon," John said. "I don't want to tell them I did a Levi's commercial instead."

He never made the tournament. Driving north of Mexico City with twenty-year-old Joe Heldmann, a former New Jersey tennis champion, he came upon a winding turn and went 600 feet over the side. Theirs was not exactly a star send-off. Most newspapers, if they carried anything, ran a small wire-service story: Two tennis players killed. But in John's world, the reaction was strong. A kid he'd coached in the Junior Bowl dedicated his win to John; two players at the Mexican tournament wrote a song. Three weeks after his death, his parents had received 1000 letters of condolence—an extraordinary thing for a man his age. One was from a judge who likened him to a young Apollo. One was from a girl in Australia, one of the ball kids that John had taken to dinner, though most players wouldn't even have bothered to remember her name. One was from the Stanford University tennis coach, the head of the opposition when John was the top-rated player at Pepperdine University. And the girls, of course, all the letters from the girls.

"It feels like such a cliché to call it charisma," says Linda Pentz, the editor of Tennis Week and a close friend of John's. "But he had an incredible effect on people. An unbelievable body, a great smile and a kind of warmth that just enveloped you."

His manager, Paul Lazzaro, said the same: "John felt that he had enormous energy and that people knew he had this energy and fed off it, and he was happy to give it to people. He said he had something he called 'happy power'—he made people happy."

Golden tennis pro with the golden future. His growing up had been golden, too. A Long Island tennis family, all redheads: two sons, two daughters, the father, King, and the mother, Yvonne, both tennis instructors. A close family that played tennis as a family sport. John got into the game at seven, was ranked in his first tournament at eight. He was a natural, but an ambitious natural. At fifteen, he told the family he wanted to study at Harry Hopman's tennis camp in Florida. Three years later, he was at Pepperdine University in Malibu on a tennis scholarship. He was named to the all-American tennis team for 1982-1983. Out on the court he played with a red bandana around his head.

Things happened to him that do not happen to other people. Once he was sitting in a restaurant, and Mel Brooks was there with a gang of people, and they asked him to read for a role. They needed a guy with "drop-dead looks." He made things happen, too. Offered a part in a tennis movie, he found the script unbelievable, so he rewrote a scene and sent it back. They called and asked if he'd rewrite the entire screenplay.

In September 1983, he turned pro. A couple of months before, he had signed with the Nina Blanchard modeling agency. Because he had so much charisma, so much personality, Blanchard told John's manager that she'd personally promote him. But John was never around. He was off playing tournaments in Australia and Thailand, trying to build up his point average. And the lists, always the lists. He wanted to get his foot in the door as writer and actor and model; he wanted to see his script produced; he wanted to be well liked in his field; he wanted to write for magazines.

Too much to do, too little time. In April, he got word of two big modeling breaks: the Levi's commercial and a Lincoln-Mercury catalog. But there was that tournament in Mexico. He and Lazzaro fought about it; Lazzaro didn't want him to miss the jobs, it was a dinky tournament, the roads were terrible. But John insisted. That weekend, on a narrow, winding road north of Mexico City, John and his friend Joe went over the side. There'd been a sudden bend, no warning signs, no rail. Joe's father, who went down to investigate, said they almost made it. There was a skid, a long skid; they were trying like hell to stay on the road.

It happened on a Sunday. On Tuesday, the Pepperdine team played UCLA in a big tennis match. In memoriam, the Pepperdine players wore red bandannas. They usually lose to UCLA, but this time, on the last point, the last double, they clinched the game.

The memorial service was in Malibu, in a chapel overlooking the ocean, on one of those beautiful, brilliant, clear days. Driving there, down the Malibu Canyon Road, Linda Pentz felt the ocean had never looked lovelier; the sky so blue, the sun so deep. There was no casket. The family had taken his ashes, in a tennis-ball can, to his favorite spot at Zuma beach and scattered them in the sea. "Ah," thought Linda, "he's out there already. That's why the ocean looks so blue."

John Van Nostrand left a legacy of sorts, Paul Lazzaro still has one of those lists.

"To work on relationships," John had written. "To establish myself as one of the best tennis players in the world; to have a beautiful and exciting girlfriend; to buy my parents a house anywhere they want to live; to live a healthy and happy life."●

ADMINISTRATION'S ARMS CONTROL RECORD

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, there should be no arms control debate in this fall's Presidential election campaign. The Reagan administration's record in this area speaks for itself with an eloquent silence. For those who believe that mutually beneficial and verifiable arms control agreements can serve our national interest, this administration fails every fair and reasonable test.

I would like to place in the RECORD of our proceedings the following information supplied by the Council for a Livable World, which describes the Reagan arms control record clearly and concisely.

The information follows:

SIX PREVIOUS PRESIDENTS HAVE PRODUCED ARMS CONTROL AGREEMENTS

RONALD REAGAN HAS FAILED TO PRODUCE A SINGLE ONE

President Dwight D. Eisenhower: Antarctic Treaty (1959).

President Lyndon B. Johnson: Outer Space Treaty (1967); Latin American Nuclear-Free Zone Treaty (1967); and Non-Proliferation Treaty (1968).

President Richard M. Nixon: Seabed Arms Control Treaty (1971); Accidents Measures Agreement (1971); Hot Line Modernization Agreement (1971); Biological Weapons Convention (1972); Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty (1972); SALT I Interim Agreement on Offensive Arms (1972); Prevention of Nuclear War Agreement (1973); Anti-Ballistic Missile Protocol (1974); and Threshold Test Ban Treaty (1974).

President Gerald R. Ford: Vladivostok Aide-Memoire (1974); Geneva Protocol (Ratified by U.S. 1975); and Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty (1976).

President Jimmy Carter: Environmental Modification Convention (1977); SALT II Offensive Arms Treaty (1979); and Nuclear Material Convention (1980).

President Ronald W. Reagan:

RONALD REAGAN HAS NEVER SUPPORTED ANY NUCLEAR ARMS CONTROL AGREEMENT

One sentence of President Reagan's State of the Union address in January 1984 received the loudest and longest applause from Congress: "Nuclear war cannot be won, and must never be fought." Nevertheless, the United States and the Soviet Union are engaged in an unrestrained arms race. Destabilizing new weapons are increasing the risk of nuclear war, and future developments may be even more dangerous.

For the first time in 15 years, US-USSR negotiations to limit nuclear arms have been completely broken off. Ronald Reagan is the only American president who has not met with Soviet leaders since diplomatic relations were established by Franklin Roosevelt 51 years ago.

Ronald Reagan has not supported a single nuclear arms control agreement, even those which were negotiated by Republican presidents.

In 1963, Ronald Reagan opposed the treaty negotiated by President John F. Kennedy that eliminated above-ground nuclear testing by the superpowers and reduced the amount of radioactive fallout in the atmosphere.[1]

In 1968, Reagan opposed the Non-Proliferation Treaty, negotiated by the Johnson Administration, in which 118 nations have since pledged to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.[2] Reagan's lack of commitment to preventing the spread of nuclear weapons was demonstrated again 12 years later when he said: "I think that all of us would like to see non-proliferation, but I don't think any of us are succeeding in that. . . . I just don't think that's any of our business." [3]

In 1972, Ronald Reagan opposed the SALT I Agreement and the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty negotiated by Republican President Richard Nixon.[4] These pacts put the first restraints on the US-USSR nuclear missile competition.

In 1974, Ronald Reagan opposed the SALT II understandings reached by Republican President Ford with Soviet President Brezhnev at Vladivostok. Reagan said, "I think we gave away too much at Vladivostok."[5] Two years later, Reagan opposed the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty.[6]

In 1979, Ronald Reagan opposed U.S. Senate ratification of the SALT II Treaty signed by President Carter. Reagan called the treaty "fatally flawed"[7] and said, "SALT II— ship that thing back to the Soviets in Moscow."[8] During the 1980 election campaign, Reagan said that a large-scale arms build-up by the U.S. would be his strategy for negotiating with the Soviets: "The one card that's been missing in these negotiations has been the possibility of an arms race."[9]

As President, the Reagan record on nuclear arms control is perfectly consistent with his past positions. He has accomplished nothing to reduce the threat of nuclear war. Reagan is the only President since Harry Truman who has failed to produce at least one nuclear arms control agreement.

The Russians have always been difficult negotiating partners. Previous Presidents have been able to negotiate agreements with them. The Ronald Reagan who opposed every nuclear arms control agreement before he entered the White House is clearly not trying very hard for other agreements now that he is President. It is also clear that President Reagan will not negotiate seriously with a nation he has referred to in speeches as "an evil empire" and "the focus of evil in the modern world." His record inspires fear that President Reagan, in a second term, might not even pay lip service to arms control, but would intensify his confrontational approach to the Soviet Union.

BANKING: LET'S NOT FORGET THE POOR

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

Monday, July 23, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, on both sides of the Capitol, legislation is advancing to address the dramatic changes occurring in the financial services industry. As we proceed, we must maintain an eye on what these changes mean to the consumer. In particular, the question of increased service fees, long check-holding periods, and minimum balances all present increased costs to consumers. Because of the structure of these new policies, they impact most severely on the poor.

In an effort to address the increased burdens on the small- and low-income bank customer, States such as New York are developing lifeline services which provide all consumers with the opportunity to obtain and maintain checking and savings accounts. Such a lifeline concept recognizes the unique role banking plays in our economy by providing a safe place for money and acting as a conduit for capital. The changes that are revolutionizing this industry should not at the same time force the poor and the elderly to bank under their mattress.

Recently, officials of the American Express Co., discussed the relationship of banking and the poor with a reporter of the American Banker. I would like to enter this article for the review of my colleagues.

[From the American Banker, June 28, 1984]

AMEXCO: BANKS, THRIFTS SHOULD SERVE THE POOR

INSURED INSTITUTIONS SHOULD PROVIDE LIFELINE, OFFICIAL SAYS

(By Robert M. Garsson)

NEW YORK.—Money may be "the ultimate utility" and if so, it is the insured depository institutions that should provide a lifeline to the payments system for the poor and elderly, an American Express Co. executive said Wednesday.

"The key is insurance," said Harry L. Freeman, senior vice president for corporate affairs, explaining why American Express thinks banks and thrifts should provide services to the poor.

In the financial services industry, the lifeline concept means all consumers should be able to obtain checking and savings accounts, added Meredith M. Fernstrom, senior vice president for public responsibility at American Express.

Customers who might need "lifeline" services are the least desirable and least profitable for financial services companies. Indeed, Ms. Fernstrom said in a presentation Wednesday that American Express' target market is characterized by consumers of high social-economic status—younger, better educated, and well-paid individuals who don't have trouble gaining access to the payments system.

"Some consumer leaders say the poor and the elderly are being forced back to banking under the mattress," Ms. Fernstrom said.

Asked about a solution to this problem, Ms. Fernstrom said, "A lot of it boils down to public policy considerations." She noted that in New York State, "they [legislators] are looking especially at banks and savings and loans" to provide lifeline services.

CONSUMERISM "ALIVE AND WELL"

Discussing an American Express survey, Ms. Fernstrom emphasized that "the consumer movement is alive and well," and that the financial services industry must reckon with it or face penalties in the form of new regulations or legislation.

"There are 391 grass roots groups engaged in consumer advocacy, according to the Consumer Federation of America," Ms. Fernstrom said, illustrating the movement's clout. In addition, there are 391 consumer protection offices at the state, local, and national levels, as well as some 300 "Action Line," columns in newspapers and 70 consumer hot lines on television and radio.

In one area of importance to banks, thrifts, and other financial services companies, Ms. Fernstrom noted that consumer leaders don't like the move toward explicit pricing of services, such as for checking accounts.

"They are questioning the validity of the prices," she said. "We are not doing a good job of communicating what our costs are."

Footnotes at end of article.

Ms. Fernstrom cited four trends in consumerism that she said will affect the financial services industry:

The maturation of the consumer movement. Although there is less government support for consumerism under the Reagan administration than under previous administrations, consumer groups are well organized; are willing to join labor, political, and other groups in coalitions; and are more willing to narrow their focus to specialized issues when necessary.

The rise of international influence. The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, for example, has urged member nations to establish national payments councils and to pay particular concern to electronic funds transfer issues.

Increased consumer awareness. "Consumers are more knowledgeable today, and less compliant," she said.

Deregulation. As layers of government regulations are stripped away, banks and other financial services companies "are coming face-to-face with the real consumer for the first time," she said.

On the other hand, she said, the proliferation of service providers and the number of financial services available today is confusing to consumers.

Disclosure about product offerings should not only be made voluntarily by financial services companies, she said, but there is a case to be made that such disclosures should be standardized across industries. Moreover, she added, required disclosures may be worth accepting as a trade-off for deregulation.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, July 24, 1984, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

(Legislative day of Monday, July 23, 1984)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable MACK MATTINGLY, a Senator from the State of Georgia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Father in Heaven, we declare our gratitude for the success of the Democratic Convention. We thank Thee that no outside interference disrupted the agenda and that no violence caused accident or injury to those who attended, leaders, delegates, press, and observers. We thank Thee for the unity which prevailed, despite the possibility of division.

We praise Thee, God, for our political system, for the vision of our founders, and for the fact that it continues, despite its failures, as the system which guarantees security and freedom for all citizens. Forgive our failures and help us to work our system in ways that will overrule human greed, pride, and selfishness which deprive any group or individual of God-given rights. In the name of Him who loved and served all people impartially and unconditionally. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, Tuesday, July 24, 1984.
To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable MACK MATTINGLY, a Senator from the State of Georgia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. MATTINGLY thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the acting majority leader is recognized.

RETURN FROM ALASKA

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, having just returned from Alaska I attribute our presence here to technology, and I mean the technology of air-conditioning. It was quite a shock to come back into the Washington scene earlier this morning. I left Anchorage, AK last night at 8:50 p.m. Incidentally, I found out that the salmon were running again and they were not running the 1 day I had on the Kenai River in Alaska.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the legislative agenda for today was outlined by the majority leader yesterday.

Following the time for the two leaders under the standing order and a special order in favor of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not past the hour of 12 noon.

The Senate will stand in recess from 12 noon until 2 p.m. for the respective policy meetings.

At 2 p.m. there will be a rollcall vote in relation to House Concurrent Resolution 332, the Sakharov-Bonner resolution.

Following that vote the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 5798, the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill.

The yeas and nays have been ordered on the resolution at 2 p.m.

CLARIFICATION OF INTENT OF 1867 CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND RUSSIA

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this week a U.S. delegation will be meeting in Moscow to discuss the boundary off Alaska between the United States and the Soviet Union. The discussions will attempt to clarify the intent of the 1867 convention between the United States and Russia which provided for the conveyance of the territory of Alaska to the United States.

I believe these talks which have been conducted for several years are progressing in an acceptable manner. Technical issues regarding the boundary line depicted in the 1867 convention still need to be resolved.

The importance of this issue is well known as we believe substantial oil and gas resources may be found on the U.S. side of the line and fishery resources in the area will also be affected by this decision.

I am most pleased that the Department of the Interior has moved forward with the Navarin Basin oil and gas lease sale in a manner which fully preserves the rights of the United States pending the outcome of these discussions.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Monday, July 23 Washington Times entitled "U.S., Soviets Discussing Bering Sea Boundary."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S., SOVIETS DISCUSSING BERING SEA BOUNDARY

(By Dave Doubrava)

U.S. and Soviet officials are meeting today in Moscow to continue negotiations over who owns a portion of the Navarin Basin, a potentially energy-rich oil and natural gas leasing area in the Bering Sea between Alaska and the Chukchi Peninsula.

The negotiating session, the fourth on the subject since 1981, seeks to define disputed portions of the maritime boundary between the two countries, which was established by the 1867 Convention, the instrument under which the United States bought Alaska from czarist Russia.

A dispute grows out of technical differences in the manner in which the United States and the Soviet Union depict the line.

Last week, State Department officials declined comment on the status or details of the negotiations, citing standard policies against discussing treaty negotiations.

But they denied the suggestion that the United States may "give away" what may be a potentially energy-rich oil and gas exploration area, or that it accepted the Soviet version of the 1867 Convention line when the Interior Department recently conducted a lease sale in the basin.

The lease-sale procedures, according to the State Department, "preserve and protect the U.S. claim to this area and at the same time recognize the fact there are ongoing discussions with the Soviet Union and that the Soviet Union also claims part of the lease sale area.

"The procedures are designed to be consistent with U.S. views on the maritime boundary without prejudicing a negotiated resolution on the issue.

"To infer a giveaway from participation in negotiations to resolve differences over the boundary—the responsible course of action under international law—is simply unfounded," the State Department said.

In April, the Interior Department accepted bids on 186 tracts in the Navarin Basin for oil and natural gas exploration, including 20 tracts in the disputed area.

According to Interior's Minerals Management Service regional office in Alaska, more than 28 million acres within the basin were offered for lease in April, with about 939,000 acres actually leased.

Of that total, about 98,000 acres were leased in the disputed portion of the basin.

However, under terms of the lease sale, no actual exploration will be allowed in the disputed tracts until the maritime boundary dispute is resolved, Interior Department officials say.

In addition, the money paid for the leases will be held in escrow by the federal government for five years or until the dispute is resolved, with those companies which leased the tracts retaining the option to have their money returned after the five-year period.

Interior officials said no firm estimate of the potential value of the oil and gas in the basin—or its disputed portion—could be determined. But they note that oil and gas concerns paid $112 million, the amount now held in escrow, for the 20 leased tracts in the disputed area.

Spokesmen for Alaska's congressional delegation and Gov. Bill Sheffield said the State Department has kept them fully informed of the negotiations and that they support the department's handling of the matter.

The disputed area lies in the Bering Sea more than 200 miles off the Alaskan mainland. U.S. maps depict the maritime boundary as generally running from between the narrow Bering Strait separating Alaska from Siberia southwesterly to the outer islands in the Aleutian Island chain.

The Soviets contend that, according to their calculations, portions of the boundary should be moved toward the east, thereby extending their territorial jurisdiction further into the Navarin Basin.

The U.S. depicts the boundary by "arcs of great circles" approximating the shortest distance between two points on the surface of the Earth, according to the State Department. The Soviet Union depicts the boundary using "rhumb lines," or lines of constant compass bearing, used primarily for navigation.

U.S. and Soviet negotiators have met on the issue in November 1981, May 1983 and January 1984, alternating their discussions in Washington and Moscow. The current round of meetings in Moscow is expected to last two days.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of our time on this side and ask unanimous consent that if the majority leader has a statement to appear in the RECORD, it appear in the RECORD at this point.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Democratic leader, I ask unanimous consent that his time be reserved for his later use today.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

ANSWER NO. 1 TO GENERAL GRAHAM ON WORKABILITY OF ANTINUCLEAR MISSILES

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on June 27 on the floor of the Senate I spoke in response to an editorial in the Wall Street Journal titled: "Star Wars Works." I disagreed with the Journal editorial contention that the administration's strategic defense initiative or antimissile program, otherwise called Star Wars Works based on one test success compared to three test failures. I pointed out that the Defense Department itself has told us it would be 8 years or so and the expenditure of some $50 billion in research before they would be able to give us the Defense Department's opinion of whether the antimissile program would work. I also pointed to the immense cost of the program and the ease with which an adversary might, over the years, defeat the program even if it could be perfected against the 1984 Soviet offensive missile arsenal.

On July 10, Gen. Daniel Graham wrote me a letter vigorously protesting my speech. Mr. President, this issue is so critical to the defense of this country and the cost of the strategic defense initiative is so enormous—not $50 billion, but it could easily exceed $1 trillion—that I intend to answer General Graham in a series of speeches on the floor over the next several days. General Graham broke his response down into seven parts, and I am going to take seven speeches to answer it. For the information of Congress, I will answer each of the general's points and ask unanimous consent that his response be printed in the RECORD before my answer to General Graham's position. General Graham's seven part response is based on a series of positions that he attributes to opponents of the administration's strategic defense initiative or "Star Wars." The first position he attributes to those of us who oppose this program, General Graham characterizes as "It Can't Be Done." I ask unanimous consent that this first section of General Graham's response be printed at this point in the RECORD:

1. IT CAN'T BE DONE

Answer. Several groups and individuals have made this charge. It should be noted that these naysayers disapprove defense against nuclear attack in principle—they adhere to the all-offense, vengeance oriented doctrine of Mutual Assured Destruction. They would not deploy High Frontier if it could be done tomorrow at no cost. On that basis alone, their complaints about technology are, at best, suspect.

Some of these naysayers appear to have the scientific credentials to make feasibility judgments—e.g., the Union of Concerned Scientists, Carl Sagan and three ex-Admirals (Gayler, Larocque and Carroll). They are few in number, however, in comparsion with the list of experts who attest to the feasibility of defense against ballistic missiles.

It is very important to note that those who say "it can't be done" preface their objections with the assumption that the goal of the defense is perfection, i.e., a "total", "leakproof", "impermeable", etc. system: Given an impossible goal (there never has been nor never will be a perfect defense against anything) it is not difficult to prove that it can't be done. These naysayers write lengthy papers to prove the obvious—perfection is not in the cards. But by insisting that no defense is worthwhile unless perfect, they are able to write reams of paper about the difficulty of obtaining super-exotic "Star Wars" weapons and give short shrift to the simpler solutions such as High Frontier's.

What they fail to see or refuse to admit is the fact brought out by the President's commission on the subject: An imperfect defense can add enormously to our deterrent to nuclear war. We should not review a 90 percent effective defense solely in terms of reducing the numbers of weapons getting through, although preventing 90 percent of those nuclear detonations certainly beats accepting 100 percent the way we do today. The real advantage is the certainty that no Soviet leader would ever contemplate a 10 percent effective first strike against us.

As for the technical feasibility of the High Frontier system, it was judged feasible twenty years ago by scientists and technicians. The High Frontier technology has been tested successfully by the Soviet Union since 1972. Their antisatellite weapon works by sending a large missile into space carrying a small kinetic energy-kill device. The device leaves the missile and travels to the targeted satellite where it creates a cloud of fragments which destroys it. This is the High Frontier system in reverse. High Frontier sends the kinetic energy device from the defensive satellite to intercept the missile and destroy it with fragments or pellets. If the Soviets could do such things 12 years ago, we can surely apply that technology today.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, neither this Senator nor anyone I have quoted has said that this antimissile program cannot work. One does not have to believe in miracles in this technological society of ours to recognize that anything or almost anything is possible. Certainly, for example, it is possible over the next 10 or 15 years say by the year 2000 to perfect, produce, and deploy an antimissile program that would defend against the kind of intercontinental missiles the Soviet Union has in their arsenal today in 1984.

If we spend enough money such a defense might even have a better than 50-50 chance of working to provide say 90 percent protection against such incoming Soviet intercontinental missiles. But this is true only if we assume the Soviets watch this U.S. star wars deployment with equanimity and do nothing about it for the next 15 years. Suppose such a system were in place, fully deployed by the year 2000. Would our adversary simply accept that situation or would the Soviet Union certainly do two things:

First, wouldn't the Soviets greatly increase the number of their intercontinental missiles. If it did this by a factor of 10, it would have precisely the same devastating effect—as an all-out Soviet preemptive nuclear attack would have today. This assumes that our new antimissile system would have the 90-percent success factor General Graham claims for it. If the Soviets did not increase their missiles at all and if only 10 percent of their offensive missiles pierced our antimissile shield we would suffer more than a thousand megaton disaster.

That is a billion tons—a billion tons—Mr. President, rained down on this country, our industries, our cities, and most of our population would perish.

Second, does anyone really believe that if we proceed with this antimissile program the Soviets will not improve offensive missile technology to try to maintain the advantage a missile offense has always had over a missile defense. The simple fact that the offense can pick the time, the place, and the volume of attack.

The offense can harden the skin of incoming missiles so that it would not be an effective defensive system. It can use decoys to frustrate and deceive defensive systems. It can rely on grounds-hugging missiles like the cruise. It could completely devastate the defensive system and Graham admits that. There are many other variations very likely—not certainly, but very likely—to permit the offensive missile technology to maintain its present technology over the missile defense in coming years.

To answer the specific arguments made in General Graham's response, here goes: Graham charges that opponents of the antimissile program disapprove defenses against missile attacks in principle. Well, not this opponent. If an antimissile system would be likely to work, I would support it. But the odds against its working are very long, indeed. The cost, as we shall see in a speech I will deliver later, will be, to use Secretary De Lauer's very words—and he is a proponent of the program—"staggering."

Second, General Graham contends that those who say his antimissile system will not work, "preface their objections with the assumption that the goal of defense is perfection." This Senator makes no such assumption. In fact, I take General Graham's own estimate of 90 percent success and show that such a record of success would not prevent total annihilation of this country.

Finally, General Graham argues that the Soviets judged that the antimissile system would work 20 years ago, and tested it successfully since 1972. It this were true, how do we explain the fact that the Soviets had so little faith in the efficacy of an antimissile system that they agreed to the ABM Treaty in 1972 banning antimissile weapons, except for a single such weapon, just one, for each superpower, and that the U.S. Senate in that same year, on the advice of the Defense Department and a Republican President, ratified the treaty by an overwhelming 88 to 2 vote.

Mr. President, in my next speech on this subject I will answer General Graham's contention that this antimissile system will be of only relatively modest cost.

BUCHENWALD AND EAST GERMANY'S MEMORY OF THE HOLOCAUST

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, there is a tiny museum on the Buchenwald concentration camp site in East Germany which is dedicated to the memory of one of the most notorious Nazi concentration camps that was used for the extermination of Jews during World War II.

Soviet soldiers and other tourists stroll in silence through this museum daily, gazing at pictures of terror-stricken humans crowded in stables, with the hollow faces and emaciated limbs that have become a familiar symbol of the Holocaust. Artifacts from the days of Nazi persecution are exhibited in gruesome detail. In one crematorium exhibit, a row of brick ovens, kept clean and tidy, stands as perhaps the most odious testament of the concentration camp.

However, the Buchenwald Museum is used by the East Germans more for the sake of propaganda than as a tribute to the more than 250,000 prisoners who were held captive there and the 56,000 who perished there.

Unlike the concentration camp museum at Dachau, West Germany, where due reverence is given to the memory of the Jews who were murdered there, Buchenwald is depicted as the scene of a great heroic triumph by the Germany antifacists and Communists who opposed the oppressive measures of the Nazi regime.

In a distant corner of the Buchenwald Museum, the sole description of Jewish suffering is mentioned almost as an aside. Inscribed with the star of David, beneath the picture of a hunched woman in a black shroud, a caption reads: "Jewish prisoners paid a high price in blood. They were special victims of the revenge, sadism and murder practiced by the S.S."

In contrast to West Germany, which has paid out more than $25 billion in reparations to Jews around the world, including $10 billion to Israel, East Germany has denied any obligation to pay war reparations to Jews or foreign governments.

Besides rejecting any guilt for the Holocaust, the East German Government also insists that the Nazi regime represented capitalism at its most evil through its forced labor programs conducted for extermination purposes.

Yet, it is behind the Iron Curtain and not in capitalist countries such as the United States where oppressive measures aimed against Jews are being practiced. Just recently we offered a day of fasting and prayer in honor of Soviet Jewry. But condemning these human rights violations is not enough. We must couple our condemnations with the passage of the Genocide Convention.

Ratification of the Genocide Convention would strengthen our position in fighting gross violations of human rights committed by the Soviet Union and its allies, as well as strengthen our rightful role as leader of human rights everywhere.

That is another reason why I continue to urge the Senate to ratify the Genocide Convention.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon with statements therein limited to 2 minutes each.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

S. 463—THE SEVERANCE TAX EQUITY ACT

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, at 9:30 a.m. this morning, the Energy and Agricultural Taxation Subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee began hearings on S. 463, the Severance Tax Equity Act, which I introduced earlier in this Congress. I was very pleased to testify at the hearing this morning. I believe the questions involved are extremely important and deserve the Senate's attention.

While I do not believe that severance taxes are inherently evil, I do believe that, in some States at least, they have risen to levels that constitute a burden on interstate commerce. S. 463 would impose reasonable limits on State severance tax limits that will help ensure that future energy price increases do not result in the outbreak of a "civil war" between the energy-rich and energy-poor States of the Union.

We have only to look to our neighbor to the north, Canada, to see the division and strife that can result when energy resources are treated primarily as local, rather than national, resources.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include at this point in the RECORD my statement before the Finance Subcommittee this morning which goes into these issues in greater detail.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ALAN J. DIXON BEFORE FINANCE SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND AGRICULTURAL TAXATION

Mr. Chairman and members of the subcommittee, S. 463, which I introduced earlier in this Congress, is designed to effectively prohibit States from imposing excessively high severance taxes on coal, oil or natural gas.

The United States has witnessed a dramatic increase in the price of energy over the past 10 years. In spite of the current temporary price stability, energy costs are now a burden on American business and on the average working men and women of this country. Americans have to worry about whether they can afford the gas to commute to work, to look for jobs, or even to heat their homes in the winter.

In my own State of Illinois, for example, the recent recession meant that the State's infrastructure continued to deteriorate, and that substantial increases in State taxes were needed. Illinois needs over $1 billion more annually just to maintain its investment in highways and transit systems. Education and social services are increasingly jeopardized.

Yet, eight States were relatively unaffected by that recession. In 1981, Alaska's tax revenue rose by 51.3%; New Mexico's by 30.3%; Oklahoma's by 24.2%; North Dakota's by 21.9%; Wyoming's by 19.2%; Texas' by 17.9%; and Louisiana's by 17.5%. These are all States with significant severance tax revenues.

Severance tax revenues currently accrue solely to the States where the tax is imposed. Unfortunately, this resource is not available to all the States of the Union. In fact, 87% of severance tax revenues go to only 8 of the 50 States. For these fortunate few, severance tax revenues are a major component of State finances. Last year, 73 percent of Alaska's revenues came from severance taxes, with Wyoming receiving 53 percent of its tax revenues from severance taxes. The six other States—Louisiana, Montana, North Dakota, Oklahoma, and Texas—currently derive more than 25 percent of their revenue from this source.

There has been a great deal of debate about the severance tax over the last several years. Those who support the tax claim that the States have a right to determine their own policies and that the tax is the price producers must pay as the cost of doing business. But, does the price of producing the scarce minerals include forcing citizens of energy-poor States to pay the costs of the local governments in the energy-rich States?

The continuing increase in the wealth of these States enables them to attract industry through favorable tax policy. Alaska, for example, was able to place revenues in a permanent trust fund and to give each of the State's residents over $1,000 in cash. All of this appears to be at the expense of energy-consuming States who are losing industries and tax revenues which are desperately needed to support and maintain daily governmental operations. The burden of severance taxes seems to be shifted to the citizens of the States that buy, rather than produce, energy.

These natural resources belong to our Nation, not just to the State where they happen to be located. We need to decide whether we are going to treat our natural energy resources as truly national resources or whether we are going to let them be controlled—because the power to tax is the power to control—by States which, through an accident of geography, are the sites of our energy resources. It is time for a national approach to be taken concerning this most vital issue.

Illinois is a major coal-producing State. It does not enjoy the luxury of a severance tax at the moment. However, evolving market conditions could soon make it very attractive for my State to impose a severance tax on coal.

And coal is not the only resource on which a severance tax can be imposed. Governors in the Great Lakes States have been seriously discussing the imposition of a severance tax on Great Lakes water that could, in the future, be piped to water-starved Western and Southwestern parts of our country. I have seen newspaper accounts indicating that the Midwest could be the future "OPEC of water."

I find that idea extremely disturbing. The United States is much more than a collection of 50 separate States. It is one Nation. It cannot and should not let control over what are truly national—not just natural—resources be decided by the individual States.

I believe the States are entitled to tax economic activity that occurs within their borders. Our Constitution makes it clear that they have the right. I have no quarrel with the desire of States to impose limited severance taxes to compensate for the impact of energy production activities on the State. However, I do not believe States should be able to impose severance taxes that raise revenues far in excess of the amounts needed to recover those costs. Severance taxes, in my view, can unduly burden interstate commerce, and are clearly subject to Federal jurisdiction.

A 1981 Supreme Court decision, Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Montana (101 S.Ct. 2946)(1981), restated that point, indicating that State taxes affecting interstate commerce are subject to commerce clause scrutiny. The Court concluded that a State severance tax is not immunized from commerce clause scrutiny and that the tax must meet a four-pronged test. Under the test, a State tax does not offend the commerce clause if it is applied to an activity with a substantial nexus with the taxing State, is fairly apportioned, does not discriminate against interstate commerce, and is fairly related to services provided by the State. The amount of a tax must be reasonably related to the services provided by the State or the costs generated by the taxed activity.

The majority opinion suggested that a uniform system of apportionment of income for State tax purposes would advance the policies that underlie the commerce clause. There is an urgent need to limit State taxes so that the total tax levy does not unduly burden commerce in the minerals so taxed. The congressional power under the commerce power is broad, and several Supreme Court cases appear to be inviting Congress to develop a uniform policy with regard to certain aspects of State taxation as a way of protecting and promoting commerce.

The constituents of the Midwest and other regions should not be forced to pay the costs of general government in energy-producing States, especially since their interests are not represented in the taxing State. Taxation without representation may chill productive activity—something the framers sought to control when they granted Congress power over interstate commerce.

Congress has acted in the past when State taxes appeared unduly burdensome and adversely affected interstate commerce. In 1976, for example, Congress enacted the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act—known as the 4R Act. One provision of that act overturned discriminating State property taxes on railroad property, including a discriminating property tax included in the constitution of the State of Tennessee. Congress decided that taxing railroad property at rates higher than other businesses was unfair and unnecessarily increased railroad rates across the Nation.

S. 463 provides a way for Congress to handle similar unfair discrimination in the energy tax area. It places reasonable limitations on State severance taxes by limiting severance tax rates to the levels necessary to recover the public costs directly attributable to the energy extraction activities. States would continue to be free to impose income taxes, sales taxes and other taxes that other businesses pay on their energy industries. Further, this legislation does not affect in any way the States' right to collect royalty income in appropriate situations. However, it will effectively prevent the use of the severance tax mechanism to raise revenues for general government and other unrelated activities.

The bill does not establish a numerical test: It does not attempt to determine the particular level at which severance taxes are exceedingly high. However, it does establish a standard that is both flexible and reasonable. It permits States to impose severance taxes to defer overall social, environmental and economic costs that are associated with the production of the natural resource. For example, States would be able to impose severance taxes to recover the costs of necessary highway upgrading or of new sewer lines needed to service the energy extraction facilities.

I believe that energy severance taxes in some States have risen to such levels as to constitute a burden on interstate commerce. One of the major reasons the 13 Colonies came together to form the United States after the Revolutionary War was to form a customs union, to ensure the free and unfettered flow of trade betwen and among the States-to-be. I think that objective was a sound one, and that it remains sound today. Our Forefathers saw this Nation working as a unified body where the free flow of goods would enable each and every State to prosper. We are a single nation, not a nation composed of separate and distinct commercial entities.

Unrestricted severance taxes by the States have the potential to undermine the free flow of trade among the States, and to incite regional strife. Some have likened the controversy over severance taxes to a type of "energy civil war." Our Nation should not have to sustain another civil war of any kind.

I think it is imperative to enact this legislation, and to enact it quickly. Our energy resources are part of our National Treasure, and their benefits should be shared by the entire Nation. Income from our energy sources should not be transferred from energy-poor States to energy-rich States.

I introduced S. 463 because I think it is time for the Senate to begin to think seriously about this crucial issue. State severance taxes raise public policy issues of the greatest importance. We should begin the process of examining those issues in a comprehensive, but expeditious manner.

I appreciate the opportunity to appear here today. I recognize the controversial nature of the issues involved, and I know many of my colleages here today do not share my views. I am realistic enough to know that this subcommittee will not act on S. 463 in the short time remaining in this Congress. However, I am optimistic that today's hearing can serve to stimulate further discussion and debate of the severance tax issues, and I look forward to a continuing dialogue with all interested parties on this crucial public policy concern.

Again, I greatly appreciate your consideration, Senator Wallop, as subcommittee chairman, for scheduling this hearing and permitting me to appear, especially since we see this matter somewhat differently. I want to thank you personally for your kindness and for your willingness to schedule this hearing in the face of so many competing considerations.

THE SEVERANCE TAX IS FAIR

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I had considered putting a statement that I made before the Finance Committee into the RECORD earlier. I did not do so.

Let me state that the Senator from Illinois has raised an interesting question concerning severance taxes. Coming from a State that does produce considerable oil, gas, timber, and minerals, I would like to reaffirm to the Senate our firm determination to continue the severance tax policy that we have pursued, and which the resource producing States in general have pursued. If one examines the taxing policies of the individual States, it is an interesting thing to note that those States which are not producing resources actually impose a greater tax burden upon the course of those resources through interstate commerce than do the producing States through the severance tax process. The severance tax is fair. It is a policy which is pursued primarily by the younger States of the Union. Those States are the resource producing States of our Nation.

I ask unanimous consent that my statement, which was presented before the Finance Committee, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR STEVENS' STATEMENT ON THE SEVERANCE TAX EQUITY ACT OF 1982 BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE JULY 24, 1984

Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to remark on S. 463, the Severance Tax Equity Act of 1982.

As a representative of the State of Alaska, I feel that it is necessary to express my opposition to and concern with S. 463. The Severance Tax Equity Act of 1982, as presented before the Senate, places a cap on the severance tax rate that a State may charge private developers for the removal of energy resources. The bill is deficient in several respects:

The limitation on a state's authority to set an appropriate severance tax rate geared to meet the future impacts of energy development will decrease an energy state's ability to provide necessary public services for its constituents;

This type of federal intrusion in state taxing policies is contrary to the sovereign rights reserved to the states by the Constitution;

The declaration of energy as a "national" resource is unprecedented in light of current national energy policy and is inapplicable to the present issue; and

This bill will cause further "regionalization" among the states of this country, making the objectives promoted by the Administration's "new federalism" initiatives more difficult to achieve.

SEVERANCE TAXES REDUCE THE NEED FOR FEDERAL IMPACT AID

The United States has made a national commitment towards decreasing our dependence on imported crude oil and increasing the recovery and production of our domestic energy resources. One of the by-products of this policy decision is the impact on local communities that accompanies this development stage. In the past, federal programs were designed to aid state and local governments that were affected by these impacts. Section 601 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Act of 1978 (P.L. 95-620) was designed to protect states and localities affected by uranium and coal production activities. The present Administration has not requested funding for this program in FY 1985.

The Mineral Leasing Impact Assistance program, through the 1976 Federal Land Policy and Management Act (P.L. 94-579) has the potential to ameliorate some of the impacts caused by energy development on Federal lands in Western states.

This program is not funded in the FY 1985 Interior Budget. The Payment in Lieu of Taxes Act (P.L. 94-565) could have provided assistance to communities affected by energy development. This program has also not been funded in the Interior Department's FY 1985 budget.

Finally, the Coastal Zone Management Act Amendments of 1976 had provisions to provide for a Coastal Energy Impact Fund. The present Administration has proposed no new funding for this program.

The justification by the Administration in each of these cases has been that the impact mitigation is primarily the responsibility of state and local governments working in tandem with local developers. In other words, the state and local governments, through their police and taxing powers, have the responsibility for requiring that private developers account, not only for their economic costs, but also for the related "Social" costs of their development projects.

The severance tax has been the energy producing states' answer to this serious and real problem. By increasing its revenue base, an energy producing state acquires the financial resources to minimize the environmental, economic, and financial costs that accompany energy development. The State of Alaska is presently engaged in using this revenue base to ease the impact of oil recovery programs and to develop its renewable resource industries such as the logging, fishing, and agricultural industries. These programs will aid Alaska in establishing a firm and stable economic base for future development when the state can no longer rely on the recovery of natural resources for its revenue.

FEDERAL INTRUSIONS INTO STATE SEVERANCE POLICIES ARE NOT WARRANTED UNDER OUR FEDERAL SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT

The Supreme Court in Commonwealth Edison Co. et al. v. Montana ruled that a state severance tax does not violate the U.S. Constitution's Interstate Commerce Clause. The Court went on to rule that Congress has the power to determine what constitutes an "excessive" severance tax margin.

Until the introduction of S. 463, the Congress has wisely decided not to place any limitation on state legislated severance taxes. In light of the current Administration's goals to institute a "new federalism" program, it is now more important than ever that Congress reaffirm a State's right to assert its sovereign authority in determining the tax rate that adequately provides for the needs of its citizens.

In recent years most of this Nation's leaders have recognized that there are State interests and powers that must be reserved for them to remain an intergral part of our federal system. Among these powers are the right to tax businesses to assure that the social costs of development are adequately addressed by programs which respond to development. The severance tax has become one mode by which energy producing states have been able to provide for the welfare of its citizenry in response to a changing local economy and environment. Congressional intervention in this area can only lead to greater state-federal strife which Congress should be minimizing, not exacerbating.

THE SEVERANCE TAX ON ALASKAN CRUDE OIL IS NOT PASSED ON TO THE CONSUMING PUBLIC

Congressional intervention might be mandated if it could be proven that the effect of the severance tax was to pass on the additional costs of the private developers to the energy consumers of this country. But several studies, including one by the Congressional Research Service on Alaska's Severance Tax, have clearly shown that severance taxes on light crude oil are passed on to the ultimate consumer only to a limited extent. The Alaskan study demonstrated that imported oil is a complete substitute for Alaskan oil. As a result, approximately 87% of Alaska's oil severance tax is not passed on to the consumer. The study also concluded that the higher prices are costly to the State of Alaska because they reduce the level of putput. Therefore, oil producers are required to absorb nearly the entire costs that are incurred by the severance tax and the resulting loss is accounted for as a loss in net profits.

ENERGY AS A "NATIONAL" RESOURCE

There have been some proposals to declare energy a "national" resource to justify the policy behind S. 463. This is simply an inappropriate and unsatisfactory justification.

First, this bill is discriminatory against energy producing states, particularly Western states where the use of the severance tax is most prominent. The negative effect that declaring energy a "national" resource will have on a state's incentive to continue to produce domestic energy is apparent. If the energy producing states do not feel that they can acquire sufficient revenues to cover the "costs" of energy development, then they will not seek out new development and energy sources. For a country that has a large interest in encouraging the production of domestic energy sources and discouraging the use of imported oil, this bill is inconsistent with the energy policy that the United States requires well into the next century.

Second, the ramifications of this proposed bill go far beyond a mere limitation on the severance rates of mineral resources. The logic could be applied to water resources, an area of traditional state sovereignty. We have seen the vigorous disputes over water resources in California and Arizona that have lasted since the 1900's. Because of several ongoing water projects, this issue is bound to reach national proportions in the next several years. Is the proper solution to this delicate problem to declare the rights to water a "national" resource and cast aside state claims to the resource? I really do not believe that Congress is willing to countenance this overreaching on the part of the Federal Government at the expense of state authority and interests. In short, it is argued that this proposal is applicable to situations where one state or group of states believes that it can recapture part of the economic advantages earned by another state's better planning and foresight. This type of premise for decision-making is inappropriate for the federal government and unacceptable to me.

Finally, S. 463 would limit the severance tax that states can charge on crude oil produced on state land as well as Federal land. Whatever justification there might be for limiting state control over federal resources, this cannot be extended to energy development on state land. Particularly in the western states where such a large percentage of the land within a state is federally owned, it is important that states be allowed the freedom, within reasonable environmental constraints, to guide development on state owned land. Currently, the federal government owns 275 acres out of 375 acres in Alaska. The State is presently engaged in acquiring the remaining lands guaranteed it under the Statehood Act of 1958. When Congress mandated that the State should be entitled to choose and own a certain percentage of the land, it seems reasonable to believe Congress intended the State to be able to assert its sovereign power over this land. This control should consist of the right to determine an appropriate severance tax. Under S. 463, the federal government intends to receive the benefits that arise from development on state land while at the same time not allowing the State government the ability to respond to the effects of resource development.

EFFECTS OF ENACTMENT OF S. 463

It should be impressed upon the Congress the consequences that this bill will have upon my state and its constituents. If enacted, this bill will cause my state to lose 8 billion dollars in revenue over the next five years. Our state budget for the following fiscal years will be nearly cut in half. This revenue is critical not only for the short-term development problems that Alaska faces, but also for the long-term development problems that we foresee.

At this critical time in our history, Alaska must develop its infrastructure to accommodate the needs of its citizens. This includes the construction of sewage systems which are presently inadequate, or for another example, the construction of highways for a state one third the size of the United States. Few realize the tremendous costs incurred by Alaska for the construction of multi-million dollar schools for villages with twenty or so students. These are just a few of the services that must be delivered to the citizens of Alaska before Alaska can begin to be said to provide services analogous to its sister states.

This proposed bill strikes at the heart of the future economic development of Alaska and all energy producing states. The effects of this bill should be carefully considered, not only on a state economy but also on the effect this bill will have on state legislatures who are currently grappling with the problems of shrinking federal assistance, increasing social service responsibilities and few revenue options available to deal with these new responsibilities.

Finally, It seems ironic that when a state attempts to look into the future and provide for its constituents against some of the negative effects of economic development, it is branded an exploiter rather than commended. The State of Alaska, as well as the other energy producing states, are embarking on a new mode of legislative thinking; rather than wait for the consequences of energy development to appear, they have attempted to plan and response to the impact on their local communities before development begins. Alaska's actions represent a prudent manner of legislative thought that should be encouraged, rather than discouraged. Alaska is planning for the future of its citizens so that is will be able to meet the challenge presently placed in front of it by a more austere federal government, and by the need to develop an infrastructure lagging far behind the rest of the United States. It is for these reasons that this bill should be rejected by this Committee and the Senate.

CONTRIBUTIONS MADE BY RADIO STATION WGN

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise to call to the attention of my colleagues the great contribution toward communication and understanding that radio station WGN has made, not only in the State of Illinois, but also in a large part of this Nation, since it went on the air 60 years ago.

WGN aired its first broadcast on June 1, 1924, and is one of the Nation's pioneer 50,000 watt "clear channel" stations. As a "clear channel," it provided, and continues to provide, nighttime information and entertainment services to parts of the country not served by local radio.

In addition, of course, it has provided the same kinds of services around-the-clock to listeners in the Chicago area and much of northern Illinois, and, of vital importance to many Midwesterners, serves as the flag-ship station of the Chicago Cubs radio network.

Mr. President, it is my pleasure to accord this tribute to WGN radio on the occasion of its 60th birthday. I congratulate the station on its professional, dedicated service to its listeners, and wish all those who contribute to its success a very bright future.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH H. BOTTUM

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, "Patriotism? We need it. So many people are making fun of government. They say it's crooked, but most people in government are very conscientious and do a very good job."

These are the words of Joseph H. Bottum, former U.S. Senator, circuit judge, and long-time Republican Party figure from Rapid City, SD. These are the words of a man who believed in patriotism, and who believed in the State and people of South Dakota.

As one who worked briefly for Senator Bottum as a summer intern in 1962, I feel very privileged to be able to pay homage to this fine citizen of South Dakota who died recently on July 4, 1984. Only 50 years previously, Bottum had begun his career in South Dakota politics as an organizers, and later president, of the South Dakota Young Republicans League.

From that point on, his political career was varied and successful. Bottum served as State's attorney at Faulkton, SD from 1932 to 1936 and as State director of taxation from 1937 to 1943. Bottum then sought, but did not secure, the Republican nomination for Governor in 1942 and for Congress in 1950. In 1960 he was elected Lieutenant Governor. During the 1960 election campaign, he carried the brunt of the race because Governor Archie Gubbrud was incapacitated by an accident.

Two years later, South Dakota had the confidence to entrust the responsibilities of higher office upon this individual. After Senator Francis Case died in office in June of 1962, Joseph H. Bottum won his party's nomination to run for Case's seat in one of South Dakota's most interesting political power struggles.

Appointed to complete Case's term in the U.S. Senate, Bottum served on the Rules Committee and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. He followed through on Case's work wherever possible for he truly believed that it was a privilege for him to be filling the term of a man who had worked for and believed in South Dakotans.

His overall voting record reflected his concern for the "ever-increasing tendency of the executive branch to infringe on the legislative branch of the Government." On agriculture—a key issue in South Dakota—Bottum opposed administration farm bills and was especially critical of feed grain provisions which would have given the Secretary of Agriculture power to fix price supports at levels from 0 to 90 percent of parity.

Joe Bottum lost the November 1962 general election to George McGovern in one of the closest senatorial races in State history—a margin of only 597 votes.

In addition to the many offices Bottum once held, he campaigned vigorously for other Republican candidates and was a public speaker in heavy demand. He also played the piano, a talent which helped pay his way through college at the University of South Dakota and assisted him in organizing the U.S.D. Strollers Club and writing the music for one of the show's first performances.

Bottum's long list of accomplishments also includes being the 1962 State chairman of the South Dakota mental health drive, past president of the Rapid City Chamber of Commerce and Boy Scout Council, a recipient of the 1984 McKusick Award from the University of South Dakota law school for outstanding contributions to the State legal profession, and in 1978, even an accomplished jogger who surpassed the 10,000-mile mark.

On Joseph H. Bottum's 59th birthday, the great Senator from Illinois, Everett McKinley Dirksen, made the following remarks about his colleague in the August 7, 1962 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> The distinguished junior senator from South Dakota is a man of great vigor * * * I know the vitality and vigor he possesses. I am sure he will use it in addressing himself to the public business. May his energy never diminish, even though his years will accumulate.

After those years had accumulated, it was plain to see that, indeed, the energy of Joseph H. Bottum had not diminished. Bottum continued with the vitality and vigor that Dirksen had described—in service to South Dakota and its people until July 4, 1984.

EXCLUSIONARY RULE CASES

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, during the recess of the Senate, the U.S. Supreme Court rendered two important decisions on the fourth amendment exclusionary rule.

In these cases, United States against Leon and Massachusetts against Sheppard, the Supreme Court has recognized a limited "good faith exception" to the general rule that no one may be convicted of a crime based on evidence obtained in violation of the Constitution. To those of us who seek to preserve strong protections against unconstitutional searches and seizures, these decisions are a disappointment, but not a great surprise.

The exception recognized by the Court is a narrow one. It applies only when the police have obtained a search warrant from a neutral, detached magistrate. Evidence discovered as a result of a search conducted pursuant to a warrant will, except in the most unusual circumstances, be admissible in court. If a warrant has been issued, the evidence can be used against the defendant, even if the search violated his constitutional rights.

The Court has not taken the additional—and, in my view, far more dangerous—step of recognizing a good faith exception in warrantless search cases, in which no judicial officer is involved. I hope that the Court will decline any invitation to do so, at least until it has had an opportunity to see how the limited exception for warrant cases works out in practice. The Congress, too, would be well advised to stay its hand.

This exception to the exclusionary rule may not have much practical effect. Never in the past 15 years has the Supreme Court ordered that any evidence obtained pursuant to a search warrant be excluded. Numerous recent decisions of the Court stress the great deference that should be accorded to rulings by magistrates on applications for search warrants. After last week's decisions, the minimal scrutiny now given to magistrate's decisions will simply diminish further.

Ironically, these rulings by the highest court in the land underscore the importance of decisions made by the lowest judicial officers. Perhaps last week's rulings will give the police a practical incentive to do what the fourth amendment demands: To seek warrants for searches whenever possible. If so, the protection of the liberties of American citizens will depend, to an even greater extent than ever before, upon the fidelity of Federal, State, and local magistrates to the principles of the fourth amendment. The actions of these officials will be under close scrutiny in the months ahead.

The Leon and Sheppard decisions are less than 3 weeks old, but they have already provoked a great deal of commentary and criticism. I would like to share two of these responses with my colleagues. First, on July 7, 1984, the Baltimore Sun printed a perceptive editorial whose title summarizes the dangers of erosion of the exclusionary rule: "Personal Liberty at Risk." Second, a thoughtful analysis by K. Preston Oade, Jr., a senior attorney with the Mountain States Legal Foundation, appeared in the Wall Street Journal on July 13. Mr. Oade points out the ambiguities created by the Supreme Court's decisions in the exclusionary rule cases, and by other decisions in the recently completed term of the Court, and concludes that, in the words of the article's title, "The High Court Sows Confusion." I ask unanimous consent that the Sun editorial and the Oade article be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, the recent Supreme Court decisions on the exclusionary rule do not settle the controversy about how best to enforce the fourth amendment. These cases counsel further examination and deliberation, not precipitate reaction. As Justice Blackmun noted in his perceptive concurring opinion in United States against Leon, the holdings of these cases are "unavoidably provisional." Justice Blackmun cautioned "the Nation's law enforcement officers * * * to recognize the double-edged nature" of a decision "that rests on untested predictions about police conduct." This is good advice for the Nation's lawmakers, as well as for its law enforcers. I hope that we take it to heart.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, July 7, 1984]

PERSONAL LIBERTY AT RISK

The Supreme Court's end-of-session decision that seems to have revoked the heart of the Fourth Amendment is dismaying. A minority on this court has been wanting to do this for years. The minority has become a majority apparently by convincing other justices that this decision isn't going to have a drastic impact or, if it does, one that can be quickly reversed. Our fear is that the decision will have a drastic impact on personal liberty that courts won't be able to reverse for a long time.

About 100 years ago, federal courts began developing a principle of refusing to admit in federal criminal trials evidence seized unconstitutionally. It seemed the best way to enforce the Fourth Amendment. Seventy years ago, the Supreme Court spelled out the principle in the Exclusionary Rule. All state courts have been bound by the rule for 23 years and some for many years longer than that. The rule was like a heart transplant into the amendment and restored the vitality the drafters of the Bill of Rights intended for it.

In a sense the Fourth Amendment is the touchstone of individual freedom. There is nothing more basic to liberty-loving citizens than: "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

Many opponents of the Exclusionary Rule argue that it increases crime by placing a burden on law enforcement officers. Hard evidence on whether crime increases because of the existence of the rule is mixed. That is beside the point. The Fourth Amendment is supposed to place a burden on government. It is more important for citizens to be secure in their homes against official intruders than for crime to drop X percent.

A narrow interpretation of Thursday's ruling says only that evidence obtained with an improper warranted can be admitted if the magistrate issuing a warrant, not the police, made the error. Read broadly, it means the Supreme Court would allow illegally obtained evidence to be admitted even if the police didn't get a warrant, if the police failure was a "good faith" error. Just the narrow reading is disturbing. Justice William Brennan argues convincingly in dissent that magistrates' decisions to issue search warrants will seldom be reviewed now. This will undermine the integrity of the warrant process. No search will be "unreasonable." That is not a happy prospect.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 13, 1984]

THE HIGH COURT SOWS CONFUSION

(By K. Preston Oade, Jr.)

In a recent series of decisions, the U.S. Supreme Court has created a welter of exceptions to the once-settled principles of Fourth Amendment law prohibiting warrantless searches and seizures. In the court's apparent haste to apply a straitjacket to the exclusionary rule, it has issued a series of rulings that leaves lawyers, judges and police officers with almost no guidance on the laws governing searches and seizures. The Supreme Court has created ambiguities that will have lower courts and law enforcement agencies tied in knots for years.

On July 5, the court closed out its terms by establishing a "good faith" exception to the Fourth Amendment, allowing the use of unlawfully seized evidence provided the constitutional violation was the result of a reasonable mistake" or was of a "technical" nature. Earlier in this term, the court also created an "inevitable discovery" exception to Fourth Amendment law; a "public safety" exception to the Fifth Amendment principle against self-incrimination, and an "open fields" exception endorsing a warrantless search of fenced-in private property surrounded by trees and clearly posted against trespassers. And without saying what rule of law is being applied, the court also permitted a warrantless surprise raid of a factory by immigration officials seeking illegal aliens.

Such decisions achieve the result desired by the court—expansion of policy powers to obtain evidence of crime—but do little to ensure that those powers will be effective in practice. In fact, to the contrary, the recent spurt of exceptions unnecessarily blurs a line that once was firmly drawn and adhered to in terms easily understandable to all and set forth in Coolidge vs. New Hampshire (1971): "Subject to a few carefully drawn and jealously guarded exceptions," searches and seizures of persons and private property are "per se unreasonable" in the absence of a warrant.

REACHING THE 'RIGHT' RESULT

Instead of achieving workable rules and consistent application of Fourth Amendment law, the court seems more concerned with reaching the "right" result in the particular case before it. And even in those cases where the "right" result does not favor expanded police authority, the court seems hesitant to reaffirm once-settled principles of Fourth, Amendment law.

In a recent Wisconsin case, the court ruled that the police violated the Fourth Amendment when they entered a man's home without a warrant to arrest him on suspicion of drunken driving before evidence of alcohol in his blood dissipated. But the court had already decided, in Payton vs. New York (1980), that the Fourth Amendment prohibits police from making a warrantless entry into a suspect's home to make a routine felony arrest. In Paton, the court, following settled principles of law, rested its decision on the express language of the Fourth Amendment, drawing "a firm line at the entrance to the house in terms that apply equally to seizures of property and to seizures of persons." Nonetheless, in the Wisconsin case the court ruled that as drunken driving was characterized as a minor offense, it did not justify a warrantless arrest in the home.

Chief Justice Warren Burger did not vote in the Wisconsin case. In a separate statement he said the court should not have decided the case so as to "deter a resolution of the question present to a more appropriate case." Translated, he wanted a case with more favorble facts to justify another exception permitting warrantless searches and seizures.

Recent court decisions illustrate how the legal system actually may be hampered by the exceptions created by the court. In a case decided this term in which I advocated the Fourth Amendment rights of a police officer charged with arson, Michigan vs. Clifford, arson investigators entered the home of Raymond Clifford, a Detroit police officer, six hours after the fire, at the same time the house was being boarded up by agents of the owners to prevent unauthorized entry. The investigators searched the entire home, rummaging through closets and drawers. Although five justice found the search unlawful and ordered the evidence suppressed, they were unable to agree on a rationale for this result. Despite the fact that my client's Fourth Amendment rights were vindicated, the court has failed to provide any meaningful guidance for future cases.

In a similar 1978 case, Michigan vs. Tyler, the court had allowed arson investigators to conduct a warrantless search of a burned-out store four hours after the fire had been doused. In that case, Justice Byron White warned that the theory employed—"a continuation of original firefighting acitivities"—would only confuse investigators. He predicted that this "continuation" exception would result in more indiscriminant, warrantless searches. His prediction was realized in the Clifford case. Relying specifically on the court's decision in Tyler, the arson investigators in Clifford thought they didn't need a warrant. If the court had established a firm rule in Tyler the investigators in the Clifford case would have secured a warrant (easily obtained) and the evidence would never have been suppressed.

We will have more such misunderstandings in the future. Police will increasingly err, often through no fault of their own, on the wrong side of the law. Evidence will be thrown out that could have been properly secured and our interest in punishing the guilty will drown in a heated sea of argument because of the court's failure to draw clear rules.

In April the court also created what can only be called the "Mexican Alien Exception," in which a majority approved the surprise raid of a factory by immigration agents looking for suspected illegal aliens. On the same day the court issued another decision extending the "open fields" exception to a private field behind a home that was fenced in, surrounded by trees and posted against trespassers. Clearly the owner was concerned that his crop of marijuana not be disturbed. But the court wrote that "there is no societal interest in protecting the privacy of those activities, such as the cultivation of crops that occur in open fields." In other words, marijuana plants may transform a private back yard into an "open field." Here, Fourth Amendment rights are again sacrificed to achieve what is perceived as the "right" result.

In an exception to the Miranda ruling, the court again this term reached for the "right" result at the expense of consistent rules of law. In that case, New York officers cornered a rape suspect in a supermarket, frisked him and found that he was wearing an empty shoulder holster. Without warning him that anything he said could be used as evidence against him, one of the officers handcuffed him and demanded to know where the gun was. The suspect nodded toward some empty cartons and said, "The gun is over there." He was charged with a weapons offense. By 5-4 the court concluded that "we do not believe that the doctrinal underpinnings of Miranda required that it be applied in all its rigor to a situation in which police officers ask questions reasonably prompted by concern for the public safety."

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, showing commendable respect for clear precedent she probably didn't like, observed that the court's "public safety exception unnecessarily blurs the edges of the clear line heretofore established and makes Miranda's requirements more difficult to understand." She predicts that the public safety exception will result in a "finespun new doctrine complete with the hairsplitting distinctions that currently plague" Fourth Amendment law. Indeed, it can be fairly said that the public safety is at stake virtually every time a police officer acts.

Prosecutors and police will be quick to exploit this new exception and its parameters will be unresolved for years.

The rule of law is not well served by the exceptions created by the court. In particular, the "good faith" exception will create a climate in which the police no longer can be expected to interpret and intelligently apply the court's decisions on the law of search and seizure. With this exception, government agents and the police quite fairly can content that they were not able to predict that a given search should be ruled unlawful, i.e. they acted in good faith. The exception, however, would not apply to "settled" principles of law—if any still exist.

MEANINGFUL GUIDANCE IS VITAL

In eight years of representing police unions and instructing officers on the laws of search and seizure, I learned how vital it is for the courts to provide meaningful guidance as to what officers can and cannot do. In the absence of firm rules the police will err on the wrong side of the line. Although it is a widely perceived myth that police officers detest the exclusionary rule, most I know have accepted the rule well—it enhances police training and has raised the level of police professionalism.

Rightly or wrongly, the Supreme Court is now widely seen as hostile to settled principles of Fourth Amendment law.

The court's distaste for the exclusionary rule is apparent. But like our system of jury trial, which can be fairly criticized on any number of grounds, no one has anything better for protecting vital constitutional rights. Neither the court nor Congress has been able to fashion a workable alternative. Instead of firmly upholding settled principles of law, the court has made the law unworkable by riddling it with vague exceptions. The only principle left standing is that a man's home is still his castle—at least until "resolution of the question presented (in) a more appropriate case."

REPORT ON NEBRASKA AGRICULTURE

Mr. ZORINSKY. Thank you, Mr. President.

I wish that I could bring the Secretary of Agriculture, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and the Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration to Nebraska to talk with the people who came to me during the recess.

These people have included bankers, cattlemen, main street businessmen, and others and they were deeply troubled about what they see happening to good, solid, efficient farming operations all across the State and in the breadbasket of the Midwest.

The situation is rapidly approaching the intolerable. Farmers are being hit by a triple-whammy of low commodity prices, rising interest rates and collapsing collateral value of land and machinery.

Here in Washington, the administration is insisting that the "farm economy is on the mend." They are saying that farmers should not look to Washington for much help during this farm credit crisis. They are saying that "the farm programs are doing what they are supposed to do—farm prices are reasonably strong, on balance—the surpluses are under control, on balance—and we are fighting to get as many exports as we can in a difficult atmosphere."

I did not find anyone who was impressed by the most recent USDA projection that net farm income in the United States would double in 1984. The figures for 1983 are not final yet, but if the estimate that the farmers' net was only $15 to $17 billion is right, then the USDA economists were off by $5 to $7 billion. Now, they are indicating that the 1984 net farm income could be $30 to $34 billion. Who knows how close to the mark they may be this time?

I think most people out in the country recognize this as a phony. It is largely a matter of inventory adjustment. The value of farm inventories is a regular component of the annual computation of total net farm income. The PIK Program and the 1983 drought sharply cut the on-farm crop inventories. In all likelihood, the crop inventories of U.S. farmers will at least return to normal this year. That adds up to a $7 to $10 billion swing on the downside in 1983 and then on the upside in 1984.

It is just a paper transaction which does not change the basic number of dollars in the farmers' pockets. The year 1983 was a bad year, whether income was at $15 billion or $22 billion. The year 1984 will bring no major improvement in real terms. It may be good politics to downplay 1 year after it is over in order to play up the next year, but it is not very convincing out there in the countryside.

In recent statements, Secretary Block has been saying that "to solve the problem, you've got to get at the fundamental problem and that's getting interest rates down."

But, interest rates are now going up. The prime rate has gone up two full points in recent weeks to 13 percent and the historical pattern has been for interest rates paid by farmers to commercial banks to run about two points higher. Each 1 percent increase in the basic cost of money costs American farmers about $2 billion a year in added outlays. Or to put it another way, each point of added interest cost reduces net income by something like 10 percent.

I agree that interest rates need to come down, but there is more to it than that. The bigger problem is the low-price problem.

Farmers could pay these interest rates if they had more satisfactory commodity prices.

You often see data on the debt-to-asset ratios and the debt-to-equity ratios. They are bad enough. They are near a 40-year high.

Let me cite a more important ratio—the debt-to-income ratio. That indicates the ability of farmers to handle their principal and interest payments.

In the year 1950, American farmers had $11.2 billion in outstanding debt and $13.6 billion in total net income. In other words, they had 85 cents in debt for each dollar of net income.

In 1960, farmers had $24.8 billion in debt and $11.5 billion in net income—that is, they had $2.15 in debt per dollar of net income.

In 1970, debt had increased to $53 billion and net income to $14.2 billion—a ratio of $3.72 in debt to each dollar of income.

In 1980, debt had grown to $165.8 billion and net income was $21.5 billion—that was $7.70 in debt to each dollar of income.

If the projection of $15 billion in net income proves to be true for 1983, then the ratio, since farmers were carrying $215.1 billion in debt, would be $14.33 in debt for each dollar of income. Summing it up, the debt-to-income ratio has worsened by 16 times in these 34 years. Interest outlays of farmers were about $21 billion in 1983, thus net income was about $6 billion short of covering that obligation.

But, as I pointed out a moment ago, the farm income shortfall is at the root of the farm crisis, including the credit situation.

Since Ronald Reagan took office in January 1981, the cost of farming, as measured by the index of prices paid for commodities, services, interest, taxes, and wage rates has risen by 12 percent.

But, the Nation's wheat producers, and that includes my constituents in Nebraska, are averaging about 77 cents a bushel less today for their wheat than they were getting in 1981. The producer of grain sorghum is getting 38 cents per hundredweight less. The prices of beef cattle are down by $2.60 per hundred pounds from 1981. Milk producers are getting $1.30 per hundred pounds less for their milk.

The bankers I visited with cited the difficulties many of their borrowers were having and indicated that some would not be able to continue beyond this season. Although the Congress authorized an economic emergency loan program to help tide farmers over, the Farmers Home Administration has been slow to step into the breach and handle loans which the banks could not continue to carry.

As of April 30, the Farmers Home Administration indicated that 35 percent of their active borrowers in Nebraska and 36 percent nationally were behind schedule in their payments. Data from the Farm Credit System and from the commercial banking sector also indicate an unusually high percentage of farm borrowers in a deteriorating situation.

During the past 2 years, more than 15,000 Farmers Home Administration borrowers have discontinued their operations either through bankruptcy or forced liquidation of one form or another. Farmers Home now has some 2,000 farms in their inventory, about eight times the previous peak.

Farmers Home officials have recently agreed that they would not sell these repossessed farms in such instances as it appeared that farm land values would be further depressed.

Of course, the drop in the collateral value of farm land has been a damaging development for many farmers.

Farm land values have now dropped for the third year in a row. They dropped by an average of 1 percent in 1982, 6 percent in 1983 and another 1 percent as of April 1 of this year. If you take into consideration the 4.8-percent rise in the Consumer Price Index, this implies a 5.8-percent drop in real value of the land.

My State of Nebraska has sustained the worst of the decline in the past year. Average land values dropped from $563 to $495 an acre—that is a 12-percent drop in 1 year.

For some farmers, the poor economic climate has been aggravated by natural disasters—for some it was last year's severe drought—for many this year excessive rainfall and flooding have created troublesome situations.

Recently, I joined with 11 other Members of this body in advocating additional lending authority for guaranteed loans for the balance of fiscal 1984 and for fiscal 1985. The House-approved version of H.R. 5743 provides for only $150 million in such operating loan guarantees. We proposed that this figure be raised at least to $1 billion for the remainder of this year and the next fiscal year. This would do much to ease the farm credit situation without incurring excessive Government outlays. We view this as a step which would enable commercial lenders to continue forbearance and to refinance loans which are now in difficulty.

This would be at least a modest first step in relieving the situations of financially stressed farm operators.

But, in conclusion, let me again stress the need for actions to improve farm commodity prices.

Frankly, my farmers in Nebraska would prefer to get more of their income from the consumers of our products and have to borrow less from their bankers. Fair prices, at least at the typical cost of production, would seem to be the genuine solution.

ITALIANS PROTEST ORGANIZED CRIME AND DRUG TRAFFIC

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, individuals from all over the world are beginning to realize how much organized crime and illegal drug trafficking are affecting their lives.

I am attaching a newspaper article, entitled "More Than 15,000 in Rome Protest Organized Crime," which describes how Italian citizens mounted a massive demonstration to protest organized crime and illegal drug traffic in Italy. The obvious outrage of these individuals regarding the impact of organized crime and its involvement in drugs demonstrates how people all over the world are becoming fed up with these traffickers in death and misery.

It is most encouraging to note that a teenage delegation representing the demonstrators met with Italian President Sandro Pertini. This is a heartening indication of how young people, those most affected by drug abuse, are fighting back and not allowing themselves to be made victims.

Mr. President, we must not disappoint concerned citizens everywhere; we must not relax in our efforts to curb international drug abuse.

I ask unanimous consent that the enclosed article, "More Than 15,000 Protest Organized Crime," the, Washington Post, dated May 5, 1984, be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MORE THAN 15,000 IN ROME PROTEST ORGANIZED CRIME

ROME, May 5.—More than 15,000 people, waving banners and shouting slogans, marched, through central Rome today to protest organized crime and illegal drug traffic in Italy.

The demonstrators shouted "No to the Mafia!" and "Too many graves are made from heroin!" as they filed past the Colosseum and Imperial Forum, protesting the Sicilian and Neapolitan underground's heroin racket in Italy and abroad.

After the march, 15 teen-age delegates met with Italian President Sandro Pertini.

The march was organized by the Committee of Neapolitan Students Against the Camorra, the crime organization controlling lucrative drug and contraband rackets in the southern Italian port city of Naples.

MORMON PIONEER DAY

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today, July 24, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are commemorating the 137th year since early Mormon pioneers arrived in the Great Salt Lake Valley.

Amidst all the fanfare and excitement of parades, rodeos, family picnics, and fireworks, are memories of the Mormon pioneers.

I am sure that my colleagues have heard the Mormon story. A legacy of hardships, struggles, and sacrifices that turned into human triumph. How they were forced in the middle of winter to leave their homes and businesses to search for a new place to settle.

One of the most inspiring traits of the Latter-day Saints was their strong belief in self-reliance. Brigham Young, an early Mormon prophet, stressed the importance of not being dependent upon the support of outside parties—Government or otherwise. The early pioneers believed in taking care of their own people. As the Mormons gathered to make their journey West, they were divided into smaller groups. A leader was appointed who was responsible for the health and welfare of each member of the group.

This concern for people was also obvious in their planning for those who would come later. Way stations were established along the way to the Salt Lake Valley where Mormon families remained to build homes and raise crops so they could feed, supply and offer comfort to those who followed. There were also three Mormon-operated ferries set up to assist those who needed to cross the Missouri River. These way stations assisted not only Mormon pioneers, but assisted an estimated 140,000 other non-Mormon pioneers traveling to Oregon and the California goldfields between 1848–52. Latter-day Saint funded way stations from Kanesville, IA, to Fort Bridger, WY, provided 6 years of important service to America's Western migration.

In settling the great basin, each settlement was the result of careful economic and geographic planning by church leaders, and carried out by the willing cooperation of the members. Each new townsite was thoroughly investigated for its agriculture potential, availability of water, fuel, and building material, as well as grazing lands for livestock.

The daily life of the settlers was not easy. Each day they organized themselves into groups to dig canals, plant crops, build roads, fences, and houses. Churches, schools, and bishops' storehouses were also built. These storehouses were constructed in each community to supply food, clothes, and other necessities for those in need. Careful agriculture and industrial planning was the foundation for the pioneers to establish a civilization in the wilderness. Many of these strong agricultural based settlements exist today in Idaho.

In the spirit of self-reliance, the LDS pioneers believed strongly in education. A good, well-rounded education would qualify their children for responsibilities in the society of which they would become a part. The important basics of education, writing, reading, and arithmetic were taught. Their library resources were extremely limited, but what books they did have contained works by Shakespeare, Thoreau, Tennyson, and others considered too difficult to read today. The simple McGuffey reader which taught lessons on honesty, fairness, and the work ethic was also used. Though the books were limited, and they did not have the equipment and tools we have today, there was no limit on the inspiration and creativity of their teachers.

However, all was not work and worry for the LDS pioneers. On the contrary, visitors were often impressed by the good humor and enjoyment of life that marked every community. Singing, dancing, drama, and other wholesome recreation characterized the Mormon way of life.

The independant spirit from yesterday exists today in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The aim of the Mormon Church is to help people to help themselves. The work ethic is a major principle in the lives of Mormons. Today as in the past, they continue to care for their membership and have one of the finest welfare systems in the world. LDS lawyers, businessmen, teachers, farmers, and housewives work together to donate millions of hours in voluntary services. They work on welfare farms, in Deseret Industries stores and canning facilities to provide food and basic supplies to those who are in need. Last winter when the Salt Lake City flood situation became serious, the Mayor of Salt Lake City called a Mormon leader and within a short time 4,000 volunteers showed up to help. To us, that is incredible; to the Mormons, it has always been that way. When Federal relief officials have been sent into disaster areas where there are groups of Mormons, they have reported fewer requests for help than was anticipated. Why? Because the Mormons today, as their forefathers before, work together and do what needs to be done to restore homes and businesses.

A good education today is just as important to them as it was years ago. The LDS believe that "the glory of God is intelligence." In my State of Idaho, one of the oldest institutions of higher education, Ricks College, is a private, Mormon-operated school. The school has excellent facilities and faculty for teaching, and plays an important educational role in the Northwest.

I believe it is important to look back at the past to gain an appreciation for the present and a perspective for the future. Too many people in our country today have developed the attitude that Government is obligated to care and provide for them. In many ways, the Government itself, has fostered this view. Today we need to emulate the early pioneers and learn self-reliance. There is much that we can learn from the LDS Church that can help bring confidence and respect back to our Nation.

Brigham Young often said:

The way to achieve success as a person, as a family, as a community, and as a nation is to work hard, plan well, and trust in God.

That formula, a major factor in the success of the Latter-Day Saints who crossed the plains and settled Idaho, continues in the LDS Church today.

The Mormons have made and continue to make invaluable contributions wherever they live. I praise their achievements, their dedication to the traditional American values, and the strong pioneer spirit they have kept alive since the first day, 137 years ago, when the Mormon pioneers entered the Great Salt Lake Valley.

THE STATUS OF ANDREI SAKHAROV AND YELENA BONNER

THE FATE OF THE SAKHAROVS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate will have the opportunity to go on record in support of House Concurrent Resolution 332, which will clearly demonstrate the support of the Congress in gaining specific information as to the well-being of Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner.

There is no question that a display of congressional concern and pressure can have a positive role in communicating our Nation's concern over another government's behavior.

But no government's behavior has been as shameful as that of the Soviet Union in their attempt to persecute the Sakharovs. The Soviets must understand that Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner are not only citizens of the Soviet Union; they are citizens of the world community. We are, therefore, appropriately concerned about their welfare.

As a leader of the Helsinki Commission, I find it inconceivable that a country that signed the Helsinki Final Act would treat a couple like the Sakharovs in such a violent manner. Despite repeated assurances by the Soviet Government and press, we have yet to obtain proof that Dr. Sakharov and his wife are alive and well. The last we heard is that Dr. Sakharov is in a closed ward of the Semashko Hospital in Gorky, where he is perhaps being force-fed and administered drugs to alter his mental state.

We know that the Sakharovs have become the symbol of the continuing struggle for freedom in the Soviet Union—and to the Kremlin, that is unpalatable. Yet, how long do the Soviets expect they can keep the world community waiting for news of their well-being.

We must never get used to or accept the fact that we can do little to ever see the Sakharovs again. The Soviets may be able to silence the voice of Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner temporarily, but they will never be able to silence the voices of condemnation by the world community. We will not let Andrei Sakharov become another Raul Wallenberg. We must not wait for some 40 years to pass before we learn the fate of the Sakharovs.

Freedom for the Sakharovs will not come automatically only because we desire it. It must be pursued by those in this Chamber and others who are concerned—by every means at our command. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 332 which expresses the sense of the Congress that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics should provide the signatories of the Helsinki Final Act with specific information as to the whereabouts, health, and legal status of Dr. Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner.

Harassment and detention of Yelena Bonner by Soviet authorities on charges of anti-Soviet agitation prompted Dr. Sakharov, recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize, to begin a hunger strike on May 2 to protest the inhumane treatment of his wife. Since that time, it has been very difficult to obtain reliable information regarding the health and legal status of either Dr. Sakharov or his wife.

The Soviet Union is morally and legally obligated to protect the human rights of all its citizens. As a signatory to the Helsinki Final Act, the Soviet Union is also obligated to justify its treatment of the Sakharovs, who wish to travel overseas to obtain much needed medical attention.

It is difficult to believe that the Soviet Union would abide by any agreements that might be negotiated on such vitally important subjects as banning antisatellite and antiballistic space missile systems in the near future, if the Soviets are unwilling to give the requested assurances and basic information relating to two of their citizens about whom free men and women everywhere are greatly concerned. I, therefore, hope that the Senate promptly approves this resolution and that a positive response from the Kremlin will be quickly forthcoming.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until 2 p.m. today.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 11:48 a.m., recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled, when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. LUGAR].

TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of a bill (H.R. 5798) which the clerk will state by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5798) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the United States Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain Independent Agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the committee and the subcommittee chairman will manage.

May I say, however, that I expect it will take a while to finish this bill.

I hope that we can finish today. But I doubt it. I anticipate that today will be a normal day. I hope we can finish the work which we need to do today by 6 o'clock.

Mr. ABDNOR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, today I am pleased to bring before the Senate, H.R. 5798, to make appropriations for the Department of Treasury, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President and certain independent agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes.

This bill contains funding for a wide variety of functions. It totals $12,738,652,000. The bill exceeds the budget request by $388,965,000. The major reason the bill exceeds the budget request can fall into two accounts: First, the administration requested $452 million for the revenue foregone subsidy, which provides reduced rates for nonprofit mailers, weekly newspapers, and educational mailers. By funding the account at this level, the rates would more than double. The committee did not believe such an adverse impact on these organizations was acceptable. The committee, therefore, has added $349 million to the request to keep rates at step 14.

Second, the administration proposed to reduce the U.S. Customs Service by 923 positions. The committee has looked very closely at this matter. We have been frugal and have put together a tight bill, but this reduction just does not fit with the enforcement effort we envision. At this time the country is being devastated by the influx of illicit narcotics and the outflow of high technology to the Eastern bloc. The Customs Service is a front line agency with regard to both enforcement efforts. The committee feels this is not the time to reduce the Service. We propose to restore the positions, plus add 100 new positions. We also propose to add funding for the Customs Air Program to continue its interdiction effort.

If these additions were not part of the bill, the committee recommendation would be below the budget request.

The bill includes original Senate language with regard to the U.S. Customs Service and Bureau of the Mint funding levels. The other body did not fund either account because the authorization has not been passed. The committee duly notes that the authorizing legislation has not been passed but has been reported. The importance of these agencies is self evident; therefore, the committee has included language.

The committee has stricken the language requiring a 1-percent across-the-board reduction. As all of the Members of this body know, I am not a big spender. However, I do not believe across-the-board reductions are the route to follow. Let me touch on just a couple of reasons why I do not believe the House language should be applied to this bill.

First, I must note that the 1-percent reduction totals approximately $120 million. The 1-percent reduction is applied to mandatory and discretionary spending alike. Two accounts in this bill are mandatory: the Government contribution to health benefits and the contribution to the retirement program. These two accounts total $5,708,421 and make up 45 percent of the spending in this bill. If you add the 1 billion plus for the revenue foregone subsidy, we are talking about 53 percent of the bill. It has been my experience that this body, as well as the other body, has been reluctant to say the least, in cutting these accounts. I do not think anybody wants to cut the postal subsidy. If one keeps that in mind, as a rule, the remainder of the bill would have to absorb the reduction. The 1-percent reduction becomes a 2-plus percent reduction.

Now, I must note that the committee has spent considerable time balancing a number of interests and done so within the budget allocation. We made difficult decisions and believe that they were the right decisions. Arbitrary reductions of this nature are not the way to legislate.

I can assure everyone in this body that we had a difficult time living within the budget, but we have done a good job; we have made tough decisions, and for some, who have not paid special attention to it, to other amendments which would significantly modify the bill would be unjustified. I urge the Senate to accept the committee recommendation.

The bill also funds the Executive Office of the President and several independent agencies.

As you can see Mr. President, this bill has much in it and is vital to the operations of the Federal Government. I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed list appear at the conclusion of my opening statement.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, before yielding the floor to my distinguished colleague, Senator DECONCINI, let me say that this bill has been worked out in a truly bipartisan manner. We were able to resolve our differences because our goals are similar. All of the members of the subcommittee deserve credit for a job well done. I especially thank the Senator from Arizona for his valuable contribution, and our staffs which have worked so closely with us.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the distinguished majority floor manager and chairman of the Treasury Subcommittee has outlined the major provisions contained in the Treasury, Postal Service appropriation bill. Let me say to my colleagues that I support this bill and urge its prompt approval on the floor today.

The committee has brought this bill to the floor in good shape. The bill is $388.9 million or about 3 percent over the President's budget request. However, if you take out the one major item over the budget request—the Postal Service subsidy—this bill is exactly 0.003 percent over the President's budget request for 1985. The committee has attempted to accommodate increases in funding for critical programs, especially drug enforcement programs, with offsetting decreases in other lower priority activities. In short, the committee has worked hard to hold the line on spending while providing the essential resources to keep the White House, the Treasury Department, the U.S. Tax Court, and other important agencies funded for another year. Finally, this bill is within our subcommittee's section 302(b) budget allocation that was adopted by the committee on June 14. Chairman HATFIELD indicated to the committee that President Reagan would sign any appropriation bill which falls within its budget allocation.

Let me point to one particular piece of this important bill for special attention: the U.S. Customs Service's air drug interdiction program. By approving an appropriation of $44.4 million for the air interdiction program, the committee has made it crystal clear that it is serious about attacking drug traffickers. This appropriation will allow our frontline drug interdiction agency to build up its air defenses against drug smugglers. It will allow the increased use of sophisticated military aircraft and radar for drug surveillance and arrest, including the P-3 aircraft with F-15 radar and Black Hawk and Cobra helicopters. It will allow Customs to install an aerostat radar system in the Bahamas and to operate and maintain a new fleet of high speed interceptor aircraft which was provided by the Congress in the urgent supplemental appropriation bill, 1984, Public Law 98-332. It is crucial to our antidrug effort that we provide Customs and our other law enforcement agencies with the tools to do the job against a well-financed, well-organized drug menace.

Mr. President, I particularly commend the chairman of this committee, Senator ABDNOR, for his commitment to the Customs and air interdiction program. It is leadership like this which brings about the ability to see that this program is properly funded. Let me take a moment to compliment the outstanding work of Senator HATFIELD, Senator STENNIS, and particularly Senator ABDNOR. This has not been an easy effort. The Senator from South Dakota has had to on occasion buck heads with powerful interests in the administration, and he has demonstrated real leadership. Throughout the markup of this bill, we worked together with committee members. We think that we have a good bill before us. We have worked hard to keep spending down while being particularly sensitive to the priorities of individual Members both on and off the committee. For their work, I am deeply appreciative. I also give special thanks to Keith Kennedy, Frank Sullivan, Chuck Parkinson, and Bobby Mills of the committee staff. I urge the Senate to adopt this bill.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments to H.R. 5798 be considered and agreed to en bloc with the exception of the amendments appearing on page 40, lines 16 through 20, and also the amendments in title III.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, there is no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I move that no points of order be waived and that the major amendment be considered as the original text for the purpose of further amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the first excepted committee amendment be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FOURTH EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 40, LINE 16

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I call up at this time the second excepted committee amendment on page 40.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator that the amendment he wishes to be considered is the fourth committee amendment.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 40, line 16, after "3109", insert the following: Provided further, That no funds shall be appropriated in this or any other Act for the Federal Labor Relations Authority to review Army and Air Force regulations governing technicians of the National Guard.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Governmental Affairs Committee having jurisdiction over civil service, I have discussed this matter with the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, the manager of the bill.

There are some 40,000 employees in the National Guard who are within the area generally designated as "technician." This provision of the bill would remove them from the collective bargaining procedures. We have some concern that the amendment as worded might actually prevent some of the existing agreements from being fully operative, in that it would provide that none of the funds in the bill could be used to carry out the collective bargaining provisions of such agreements.

As I said, I have discussed this with the distinguished Senator from South Dakota. As the chairman of that subcommittee, I am most willing to go into this matter in a hearing to determine what problems exist and, as he knows, as chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, I am quite concerned, as he is, about making certain that there are no impediments to the active working of our military in total defense agencies in times of emergency.

These National Guard technicians are civilians, but under the circumstances they are also required to have a National Guard status. So they are in a different category. And I have confirmed to the distinguished manager of the bill, the chairman of the subcommittee on this bill, that we will hold a hearing in the legislative committee on this matter and we will notify him. I am hopeful that he will understand, therefore, why I will shortly make a motion to table this amendment.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, the civilian technicians are, by law, members of the National Guard and as such, are subject to the military discipline and regulations governing all guard members while on active duty. That is as it should be, or course. If for any reason a Guard unit is activated by the Governor of a State or by the President, these technicians, as guardmen, are activated with their units. But when not activated they are employed as civilians.

But during the days when these technicians are performing their jobs as civilians, they are no different from any other Federal civilian employee and entitled to fair and respectful treatment as are all other civilians in the Federal service. And when they are in duty status, they are bound by the same military regulations, duties and demands as all other members of the National Guard who are not subject to such when they are working at their regular jobs in the community.

The report accompanying H.R. 5798 infers that Federal unions, and the labor-management provisions of the Civil Service Reform Act, have been detrimental to the National Guard. It also gives the impression that military authority and military regulations are being challenged by the Federal unions. Nothing could be further from the truth. Military regulations that affect national guardsmen in military status are not subject to negotiation nor Federal Labor Relations Authority review. Only regulations that apply to National Guard employees, in their civilian status, come under the purview of the FLRA—the same as any other Federal employee.

Further, the House Appropriations Committee Survey and Investigations Report dated June 6, 1983, states—"most of the units visited said they had no problems with labor unions or that union activities were a nonissue." The same report notes DOD, in its December 30, 1980, report to Congress, as saying—"there are no substantiated incidents where union activity has affected readiness. It is apparent that the unions share the DOD desire to have an effective work force."

Mr. President, this is the latest in efforts by a supermilitaristic, very small, minority in the Defense Establishment to destroy the civilian character of a portion of our defense posture. From previous experience I have had with civilian technicians in my State of Montana, I found that there is no more patriotic, loyal and competent group of people in our country. But they are civilians. While they are not in duty States with the Guard units, to which they and other civilians belong, they are no different from any other Federal employee and as such, are entitled to the same rights.

Let me give you just one example of what is at stake here. A few years ago, a fine young man, a very competent and skilled civilian technician with the Montana Air National Guard and a combat veteran, was chewed out roundly by an Air Force colonel because he did not drop his tools while working on an aircraft engine and snap to attention. The whole incident blew out of proportion. The civilian, an officer in the Association of Civilian Technicians, was denied the right to extend his enlistment in the National Guard, thus terminating his civilian employment. We were successful in changing this action in this case. But the attitude that led to this bizarre situation may still lurk among a few in the Military Establishment.

Previous attempts to affect similar legislation have been rejected. No hearings have been conducted and no testimony has been heard regarding this issue.

There is only harm to the National Guard and damage to experienced and qualified civilian technicians unless the interference with their rights is dropped from the bill.

The amendment should be roundly and conclusively defeated.

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I support the motion of my colleague from Alaska, Senator STEVENS to strike the language in the bill prohibiting the Federal Labor Relations Authority from reviewing regulations governing National Guard technicians. In my view, the language in the bill is extremely ill-advised and has far-reaching implications. The motion to strike the provision should be accepted.

The provision in question would affect approximately 45,000 civilian technicians employed by the National Guard. As a condition of employment these technicians maintain membership in the National Guard and thus have dual status. During the normal workweek, they are civilians subject to the benefits, regulations, and protections available to other civilian Federal employees. During weekends and other drill periods, they are military members of the National Guard subject to the lawful commands and regulations of the military.

The Federal Labor Relations Authority is empowered to hear the grievances brought by employee representatives on behalf of Federal employees. Before hearing any grievance, the FLRA makes a determination regarding the appropriateness of collective bargaining in the case before it. This review adequately protects the military function of the Guard from inappropriate or frivolous grievances that might be brought. There is no evidence that the grievance procedure under the limited collective bargaining available to Federal unions has interfered with the efficiency or readiness of National Guard units.

There have been attempts to replace National Guard technicians with full-time military personnel. These attempts have not been successful. What we are confronting in this bill is simply an attempt to achieve the same result indirectly by creating a category of quasi-military employees. These employees, although officially civilians, would nevertheless not have recourse to the grievance procedures available to other civilian employees.

If National Guard technicians are stripped of the protections available to civilian employees, a dangerous precedent will have been established. Legislation affecting representation and collective bargaining rights of Federal employees should apply with consistency to all civilian employees throughout the Government. We cannot start making exceptions and exemptions.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate to support the motion to delete this provision.●

Mr. ABDNOR. Will the Senator from Alaska yield?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes.

Mr. ABDNOR. I wish to thank the Senator. We have had a very interesting conversation on this amendment. I do have a great respect for the expertise of the Senator from Alaska in dealing with defense. He certainly makes some points that I probably have not given sufficient consideration. I do think there are some problems.

Knowing that he is willing to look into this and further review it, time takes care of my concerns. I thank him very much.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for that courtesy and for his kind remarks.

As I said, I discussed the matter extensively with other Members. I understand there is an objection to just deleting it by unanimous consent. Under the circumstances, I move to table this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] to lay on the table the fourth committee amendment on page 40, line 16.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the first committee amendment.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the excepted committee amendments in title III be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I have two amendments I want to offer at this time. Both amendments strike sections adopted by the committee before the recess. Since that time, actions have been taken that address these sections and they have, therefore, become more or less moot. They have been cleared by both sides.

AMENDMENT NO. 3387

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I send the first amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any debate of the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR].

The amendment (No. 3387) was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3388

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I have another amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 45, strike lines 7 through 18, inclusive.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, again we ask that this section be stricken because this particular section refers to the handling of the GSA property at Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii. Since the bill was reported, the issue has been resolved and this section can thus be deleted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment (No. 3388) was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SECOND EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 18, LINE 19

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the second excepted amendment be the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line 19, strike "$23,731,000", and insert "$24,985,000";

AMENDMENT NO. 3389

(Purpose: To urge President Reagan to withdraw the appointment of Anne M. Burford as Chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send my amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] for himself and Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. BIDEN proposes an amendment numbered 3389.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment insert the following:

(a) The Congress finds and declares—

On July 2, 1984 President Reagan appointed Anne M. Burford to be chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere;

For over a decade the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere has played an important role in shaping future environmental policy;

Past board members and chairpersons have had considerable expertise in the marine and atmospheric sciences and have maintained a non-partisan approach to environmental issues;

Anne M. Burford, as Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency abandoned the non-partisan approach to the environment shaped by Republican and Democratic Administrations for two decades;

Anne M. Burford's controversial and flawed tenure as Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency led to her resignation under fire on March 9, 1983.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that President Reagan should withdraw the appointmenit of Anne M. Burford to be Chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr President, I thought—as I'm sure most of my colleagues did too—that we had seen the last of Anne M. Burford in this administration. But on July 2, while the Senate and the House of Representatives were in recess, President Reagan offered Mrs. Burford a return engagement in the Federal Government and appointed her to yet another environmental post—to be chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere (NACOA).

Perhaps Mr. Reagan has forgotten Mrs. Burford's record at the Environmental Protection Agency. But no one who cares about the environment and public health will ever forget that record.

When Congress declared war on toxic waste, she declared a truce with polluters. Under Mrs. Burford, enforcement actions against illegal dumpers were virtually halted. And today, only six toxic waste sites have been cleaned up with EPA funds—of hundreds of such sites all across the country slated for priority action.

On toxic substances, Mrs. Burford charted a new course for EPA, substituting voluntary compliance by industry for congressionally mandated enforcement.

In the areas of air and water quality, Mrs. Burford sought to halt the progress of a decade in controlling and curtailing emissions and effluents.

She suspended for over 1 year the entire national pretreatment program to curtail toxic discharges into municipal treatment plants. For thousands of industrial plants, she delayed the program for setting toxic effluent limits.

She sought to allow air quality deadlines to lapse, to weaken auto emission standards, and to relax sulfur dioxide emission controls.

And when the antienvironment forces could not succeed with their policy goals, they turned their attack to an all-out assault on EPA itself. If they had had their way, they would have cut EPA's budget and staff in half. They would have cut the agency's toxic substances control program 34 percent by 1984. They sought a 51-percent cut in research and development funds by 1984—including deep cuts in funds targeted to vital research on the health effects of toxic chemicals. They eliminated the noise control program established more than a decade ago.

The simple truth is that while at EPA, Mrs. Burford did virtually everything but carry out her responsibility to protect the environment. She abandoned the nonpartisan commitment to the environment shared by Republican and Democratic administrations alike for two decades. If Anne Burford had been sent to EPA to dismantle it, she could not have done a better job. She attacked the fabric and every function of the Agency, and left EPA, in the words of her successor William Ruckleshaus, "crippled [and] in trouble." She should not have been appointed to EPA in 1981—and she should not be appointed to NACOA in 1984.

For over a decade, NACOA has played an important role in shaping future environmental policy. NACOA's efforts were critical to the original development of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1971 and subsequent amendments. A decade later NACOA urged a strengthening in the provisions of the act for a greater State role in managing coastal resources. NACOA also assisted in the development of the Clean Water Act.

Imagine how NACOA's work on its own important issues would have fared had Anne Burford been chairperson in the past. And imagine how NACOA's future efforts will be influenced if she is permitted to remain there.

A July 18 memorandum by NACOA's Executive Director to its members, entitled "Future Agenda," lists items for future study. They include acid rain, OCS "consistency"' policy, and ocean incineration.

With Anne Burford at the helm, there should be no illusions about how NACOA will approach these issues.

In other days, we could have counted on NACOA to provide objective advice and nonpartisan guidance on environmental issues. For in the past, the committee has been led by men and women of considerable expertise in the marine and atmospheric sciences. But Mrs. Burford's appointment changes this course. It threatens the integrity and value of this committee, and could end its effectiveness and usefulness in the future.

During the recess there was a great deal of cosmetic White House activity on the environment. President Reagan visited the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge and Tilghman Island, both in Maryland. He held a signing ceremony on Theodore Roosevelt Island here in Washington, DC. He visited Mammoth Cave National Park in Kentucky.

Some people are saying that President Reagan is trying to convince Americans that he really cares about the environment. I say that if he really cares, he should withdraw the appointment of Mrs. Burford.

On July 4, 1984, Douglas L. Brooks, a respected author on the environment and former Executive Director of NACOA, wrote to the Washington Post in protest against the appointment. He states:

Mrs. Burford, along with Interior ex-Secretary James Watt, is a symbol of a narrow, short-sighted Federal policy of maximizing near-term financial payoffs to the private sector at the expense of assuring the long-term availability of the resources on which the health, wealth, and well-being of the whole Nation ultimately depend. It is worse than fouling our nest—it is eating the seed corn, living today as though there were no tomorrow. Her appointment is certain to increase anxiety, polarization, conflict, and stalemate at home and loss of respect, confidence and support abroad. The sooner it is withdrawn and a more suitable person named for this position the better, both for the Reagan administration and for the Nation.

I ask the Senate to join in urging President Reagan to withdraw the appointment of Anne Burford to NACOA.

Mr. LAUTENBERG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I join with Senator KENNEDY today in sponsoring this resolution to urge the President to withdraw his nomination of Anne Burford as Chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and the Atmosphere. The resolution that we introduce today should send a message to the President that we are shocked and dismayed by this appointment.

During her 22-month tenure at the Environmental Protection Agency, there was no question about what the "P" in EPA stood for. Procrastination, not protection, was the order of the day.

New Jersey and other Northeastern States watched the poisoning of their natural resources as polluters were granted millions of tons of increases in sulfur and nitrogen oxide emissions from their tall stacks.

Communities living around abandoned hazardous waste sites read daily press revelations recounting sweetheart deals the companies responsible for cleaning up these sites.

Families with children who played in schoolyards contaminated with lead learned to their horror that, after years of progress in cleaning up lead, more lead was to be added to gasoline.

The American people became the hapless victims of policies that turned back the clock on progress made to clean up our air and water and to regulate the hazardous wastes contaminating every State across this country.

As Administrator of EPA, Anne Burford had charge over the Nation's newly enacted Superfund program. Thousands of hazardous waste sites leaking toxics into ground water and contaminating the air were to be cleaned up.

Under her tenure, funding for Superfund sites became a political football in the 1982 election.

The President's nomination of Anne Burford to chair the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere is contrary to the mandate of the committee. The NACOA was charged in 1977 with reviewing national ocean policy, coastal zone management, and reporting on the status of U.S. programs in marine and atmospheric sciences.

Its 18 member panel appointed by the President has provided expert review and advice to Congress in these areas. In fact, in 1982, when Ms. Burford was Administrator of EPA, the Chairman of NACOA delivered a stinging indictment of the administration's proposed budget cuts for EPA and NACOA ocean disposal programs.

NACOA also advised Congress to move part of EPA's jurisdiction over the Clean Water Act to other agencies. It is not surprising then that the administration recommended termination of NACOA funding in next year's fiscal budget.

As a member of both the Commerce Committee, before which NACOA testifies, and the Environment and Public Works Committee, which oversees the majority of EPA's programs, I can only pause to ask, what advice can we expect now as Anne Burford takes up her new position at NACOA?

Withdrawing the Burford nomination would be an important step in restoring the trust that was so badly damaged 1½ years when Administrator Burford and all but one of her top political aides were forced to resign from the EPA amid charges of mismanagement and political favoritism.

To truly restore lost trust, the President must respond to the American people. Poll after poll shows that the public wants protection from acid rain and toxic chemicals in their environment.

They want clean oceans, protection of vanishing coastal resources and preservation of our fisheries.

All of us from coastal States know how important the oceans are to the environment, quality of life, public health, and economies of our States.

The President can start by withdrawing the nomination of Anne Burford. In withdrawing the nomination, the President would demonstrate to the American public that cleaning up the environment, rather than reversion to pre-Ruckelshaus days, is the new order of the day at EPA.

Swift action is needed to reduce acid rain, clean up the Superfund sites that sit like ticking time bombs across our country, and to regulate the 37 hazardous air pollutants and hundreds of pesticides that are known or suspected to cause cancer and other acute and chronic illnesses.

Swift action is needed to control the flow of urban and agricultural runoff into our great rivers and estuaries such as the Delaware River and Chesapeake Bay.

And swift action is urgently needed to regulate chemicals in ground water, the source of water for over half our population. Yet the administration has opposed reauthorization of the Clean Air Act, Clean Water Act, Superfund, and Safe Drinking Water Act this year. They tell us we must wait until next year.

The American people can wait no longer. Today, we ask the President to withdraw his nomination of Anne Burford. We also ask that the President change the disasterous course of his environmental policies. The "Magical Mystery Tour," as one environmental leader dubbed the President's recent 3-day agenda of speeches and ceremonies, is not enough. The President must act now, not next year.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the resolution before us calling on the President to withdraw his appointment of Anne Burford as Chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere.

The President's appointment of Mrs. Burford to this position of responsibility is a step backward not only for the cause of environmental protection but for Mr. Reagan's own credibility on this issue.

Mrs. Burford resigned just over a year ago as head of the Environmental Protection Agency under heavy criticism for her management of that important institution. In returning her to a position of influence in the same field, the President greatly strengthens doubts about his commitment to safeguarding the environment and applying the laws designed for that purpose.

In the eyes of the American public, which for well over a decade has overwhelmingly supported protection of the environment and legislation to achieve that goal, Mrs. Burford has no credentials and no place in such an effort. Her appointment is a repudiation of the clear intent of the Congress and the people of this country on a matter of primary importance.

As Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Mrs. Burford showed little respect for the responsibilities entrusted to her under law. Under her leadership, enforcement of environmental statutes decreased drastically, as did funding for the implementation of EPA's legally mandated duties. According to sworn testimony of two career officials, the EPA pursued a deliberate policy not to implement the Superfund law aggressively during the Burford tenure.

For over a decade the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere has played an important role in shaping future environmental policy. Past board members have had considerable expertise in the marine and atmospheric sciences and have maintained a nonpartisan approach to environmental issues. The appointment of Mrs. Burford is inappropriate based on her past performance in the field of environmental policy and the qualifications of past members of the board.

I urge the Senate to adopt the amendment.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, the legislation we are on deals with appropriations for various agencies of Government, none of which covers the environmental protection area. There is a HUD appropriations bill which is the appropriate place to place such an amendment. Because the amendment is not germane, Mr. President, I move that the amendment in the second degree of the Senator from Massachusetts be laid on the table. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the Kennedy amendment. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. HUDDLESTON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

So the motion to lay on the table Mr. KENNEDY's amendment (No. 3389) was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, that last vote did not surprise me because the political years are not known for exercises in courage and courtliness.

Let me begin by saying that Anne Burford is a friend of mine. But even were she not, I would feel constrained to say what I am about to say. Somehow or another the Senate of the United States feels so picayunish in its processes that even jobs that do not require the confirmation of the Senate or hearings seem to attract our attention if a little bit of political mileage can be gained at the expense of some human pride or dignity.

I was actively ranching. Among the other things we raised out there were pheasants. We had penned pheasants. About this time of year, young pullets would begin to lose a feather. When one of them would lose a feather, a little drop of blood would appear on its hind end, and the other pheasants would eat it to death. That is what Washington reminds me of sometimes. I point out that this woman was investigated by no fewer than five committees of the House of Representatives. It found no wrongdoing. The Senate laid itself in there and found the same thing. Special prosecutors looked at it and found no wrongdoing. There is disagreement in policy to be sure. That is a legitimate role for the Senate to play. But this is a nonpolicy-making job, and advisory in its basis. But boy, does it make us look courageous to go home and stand up with a vote like that in our pocket. Some days I regret the character of the actions that I sometimes see us take on the floor of this Senate.

I yield the floor.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, would the Senator yield?

Mr. WALLOP. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the able and distinguished Senator from Wyoming. In addition to what he said I want to make this point: That if this nomination had required confirmation, we would have had the chance and the responsibility to act upon it here. But this does not require confirmation. Therefore, are we not a legislative body attempting to interfere with the executive branch in exercising its responsibilities under the law?

Mr. BAKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the vote on tabling was convincing. I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts would be willing to address the question of the adoption of his amendment by a voice vote.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Leader, I would be willing to unless we are going to get into a situation where we have further debate and discussion. I certainly think the views of the Senate were clearly demonstrated in the previous vote.

I want to make a brief comment to the Senator from Wyoming before we vote. I indicated to the leader before the conclusion of the last vote that I was quite prepared to move to a voice vote and then to permit the Senate to proceed on other action. But given some of the comments of the debate here, I think the Senate might want to express itself on the merits.

But I would be quite prepared to move to a voice vote and we can move expeditiously. I would obviously reserve a very brief time for myself to respond to the statements of the Senator from Wyoming. I would be glad to do that now and then move to a voice vote. But I would not want the comments of the Senator from Wyoming to be the last word on this particular issue.

Mr. BAKER. I yield to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, if I could, I too would not like the words of the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from South Carolina, both of whom I respect, to be the last words. I recognize that they know Mrs. Burford. I recognize that they feel that she has had nothing uncovered about her reputation and name that would lead the Senate to cast the vote that has just been cast. But I would invite them, if they could, to come with me to any number of communities in my State in which toxic wastes have continued to threaten the lives of families, whose children have been born deformed, whose water supply is contaminated, whose parents develop cancer. Toxic wastes directly threatened the public health and welfare. Then I invite the Senators to look at Ms. Burford's performance as the head of the EPA when for 2 years that law was subverted and then say that this vote was not justified. I think it was justified based on her record of service while she was head of the EPA on policy grounds.

I personally do not want her to head or even advise concerning the oceans, the atmosphere, the environment. I do not think she has the credibility for that role. I think the Senate was dead right to cast the vote that was just cast because Ms. Burford's record at EPA was disgraceful. I could not let this moment pass without saying that to my two distinguished colleagues.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, would the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I would be happy to yield to the President pro tempore. I was going to say, however, that I think I will not put the request at this moment. I hope that our deliberations will be brief and we can get on with such requests in a moment because there is much business to be done on this bill. But for the moment, I will not put such a unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I would like to make a comment to correct something that was said by the Senator from Wyoming for whom I have the deepest respect. The Senator said that there was a special prosecutor that looked into the Burford case and found no wrongdoing. There was no special prosecutor that looked into the Burford case. The Senator stated that there was a Senate investigation of Mrs. Burford that found no wrongdoing. There was no Senate investigation of Mrs. Burford.

On the issue of the Superfund, before the Senate Committee on the Environment, the two highest career officials in the Environmental Protection Agency dealing with the issue of toxic wastes testified under oath that in her administration there was a deliberate policy not to implement the Superfund law, not to clean up toxic waste sites, not to spend the money in that program before the authorization expired so that when it did expire, there would be no money left in the fund, and the argument could be made it does not need to be reauthorized. That was testimony under oath by two high career officials before our committee. That is the Superfund law which deals with the clean up of hazardous waste sites, now estimated to be over 20,000 such sites in this country.

There is absolutely no justification on policy grounds for the appointment of Mrs. Burford to this position, based upon her performance in office, and I invite every Member of this Senate to read the transcript of the testimony of EPA officials under oath regarding the implementation, or lack of implementation I might say, and the policies pursued by the Environmental Protection Agency while she served as its Adminstrator. Anyone who does so will be very hard pressed in my judgment to vote in support of her nomination to a high position in our Government with respect to the environment.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, when the news came out that Mrs. Burford had been appointed to this commission I suppose that I was among the first of the Senators to be invited to comment on that because she is a resident of my State. I will repeat to the Senate what I said at the time. I think it was a poor decision to appoint her. If Mrs. Burford had sought my advice, I would have advised her not to seek nor accept such an appointment because it was bound to be controversial. If the administration had asked my advice, I would have said do not send her name up for the post. Nonetheless, I did not vote in favor of this.

I voted to table it for exactly the reasons that the Senator from Wyoming has stated, and my only regret is that he got up and said what he did before I had a chance to do it. All this vote is as far as I am concerned is that she is not very popular in this Chamber. I knew that before this vote was taken. I expect that she did, and they probably did down at the White House, too.

The fact of the matter is whether you agree with Mrs. Burford or not in her conduct of the stewardship of the Environmental Protection Agency, what really got her in trouble was not policy issues but the fact that she got trapped in a dispute between a committee of the House and the administration.

Let us just keep that in mind. I did not agree with her in the conduct of her office in every case. I may not agree with her on all the policy issues but the reality is she got a raw deal when she was the EPA Administrator. She was requested and then required under subpoena to submit certain documents to that House committee. She was instructed by the people she worked for in the administration not to do so. She honored that direction. Then when she got in trouble as a result of that, literally as a result of following the directions that she was given by those she was working for, then they sort of threw her overboard and said, "Well, this is getting too controversial for us." But now that is actually what happened. If she were here today for confirmation for a policymaking position, presumably her nomination would have been the subject of hearings. In that event, all the Senators who have so many policy disputes with her—and I might be one of them on some issues—would have an opportunity to question her, to determine her fitness to administer the law, to determine what her views are on various statutes and proposed policies, and to do that in the normal way that we screen and test qualifications of persons whose names are submitted for confirmation by this Senate.

But that is not the case. This is just an expression of how we feel about it, based upon the news accounts and our previous associations. Frankly, I do not want to belabor the issue, but in my opinion we really have not added anything to the thought life of this country. We have not enriched anybody's understanding of the problem. We have not added or subtracted to Mrs. Burford's reputation. All we have done is express the opinion that she is not very popular around here. I just remind all Senators that there are a lot of times when Senators are not popular either. So maybe it would be well if we were not quite so quick to make judgments of that kind.

Mr. EAST addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EAST. Mr. President, I would like to briefly associate myself with the comments of the Senator from Wyoming. I shall be brief.

I do agree with him. I think in Washington there is a fervor of what I would call cannibalism and whenever they smell blood the sharks go for it. They did it in the case of James Watt. They tried to do it in the case of Donovan. It did not work. They tried to do it in the case of Mr. Meese. It has not so far worked. They did it in the case of Mr. Richard Allen. Now they are trying to do it in the case of Mrs. Burford.

It may be popular, but I do not consider it particularly civil. I think it unbecoming for this body, which has no prerogative, as the Senator from South Carolina indicated, to confirm this. This is not one we have to confirm.

I simply think what you have seen here, Mr. President, is a rather craven display of the typical Washington presentation of cannibalism which will sell well in the media and make the Senators who support it supposedly look good in some way or another. I do not know how. But I think it is uncivil, uncalled for and unwarranted.

I think the motion to table was well taken. I only regret that it did not succeed for the reasons the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, the Senator from Colorado, and the Senator from South Carolina have said. I associate myself with their remarks on the result of this vote.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am rather surprised that my colleague would refer to some 30 Members of his own party who voted against the motion to table as "sharks."

After this rhetoric, Mr. President, I believe it would be valuable to refer to the law which spells out the qualifications for membership on the board. That might be of some relevancy in terms of the discussion of this particular member of the board. I am reading after the 1977 act.

Members shall be appointed only from among individuals who are eminently qualified by way of knowledge and expertise in the following areas of direct concern to the committee: One, one of the disciplines and fields included in marine science—

I hope that those who are opposed to this resolution are going to be able to document now on the floor her background and experience with regard to marine science.

—marine industry, marine-related State and local government functions, coastal zone management, and matters of ocean policy.

Where are the defenders of this individual to speak for her qualifications in those areas? The law is very clear.

We did not have a chance in this Senate to express ourselves on this particular nominee. This is our only opportunity to do so.

So before all of those individuals who oppose this amendment get up on their own high horses of political rhetoric, they are able to indicate to us during the course of this debate, how Ann Burford is qualified under the law of 1977. That is the question that I ask either the Senator from Wyoming or from North Carolina or from South Carolina. Just review the law and describe to the Members of this body how she is qualified under the particular language of the law.

She is not, Mr. President. That is why I think this body ought to have a rollcall vote up or down on it. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. WALLOP. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the floor.

Mr. WALLOP. Mrs. Burford has capability both by education and experience in the fields about which the Senator spoke.

Mr. EAST addressed the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EAST. I would like to respond to the statements of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Having watched the Democratic Convention, where he was most eloquent in speaking, where the use of rhetoric was quite high but the employment of facts quite low, I found his comments here strictly high-blown rhetoric. We have had no hearings on this. He has no reason to offer to us that she is not qualified in these areas. By the volume of his voice and his usual quality of eloquence he simply expects to assume that somehow or other she is unqualified. But he has offered no evidence that she is not.

More significantly, as the distinguished Senator from South Carolina has pointed out, this is a Presidential nominee. We are not involved in the confirmation process. We consume inordinate amounts of time in the U.S. Senate on totally extraneous matters that we ought not have before the Chamber.

We ought to be dealing with matters of substance. This is pure unabashed politics in a political year, and the power of rhetoric and the eloquence by which it is stated do not add to the facts.

One can respond with just as much volume, maybe not quite as much eloquence, this is an effort, a magnificent one, as the Senator from Wyoming has said, a typical Washington cannibalism.

I have been in this city for 3 years and I have seen it, when people are just beaten down. I do not see how you are going to get qualified people of either party, liberal or conservative, in the long run to serve the U.S. Government because nobody wants to come here and take that kind of abuse.

I think in her case she was hounded out of office.

All the President has done is make a nominal appointment to a nominal commission, not requiring our confirmation. Once again, the political atmosphere has the smell of blood and the sharks come running. I do not care which party they are in. They cut her down and they chew her up and they eat her. Supposedly we have been very civil, we have been very senatorial, we have been very responsible as a legislative body.

I say nonsense. There were no hearings, there was no debate, and this motion should have been tabled.

Of course, it will pass, but it is still what the distinguished Senator from Wyoming said it was, it is Washington cannibalism. The media will feed on it, the Nation will be fed large spoonfuls of it tonight, and many Senators will go home resting well. But I think she has been treated very shabbily and I want the RECORD to say so. I will say it with equal volume as the able Senator from Massachusetts, but maybe not with the same eloquence.

He offers no evidence that she is disqualified. Again, we have had no hearings; we have had no serious discussion.

This is politics. This is cannibalism. Let us admit it for what it is. Let us not try to dignify it with this pious, righteous concern for toxic waste, the environment, ad infinitum. Politics 1984, that is what it is.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Which Senator from New Jersey?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Thank you, Mr. President. I ask my senior colleague from New Jersey to defer, if he will, for just a minute. I think we were on a reasonable track until we talked about pious disregard for the issue. I would ask the Senator from North Carolina to join us at one of our environment committee hearings when we sit with families in front of us who have seen their children go bald from chemotherapy because they have been exposed to toxic waste. That is what we are talking about.

I submit to the Senator from North Carolina that there are many qualified candidates for this job. The last Chairman of NACOA was Dr. John Knauss, the dean of the graduate school of oceanography and vice president of marine affairs at the University of Rhode Island. Members of NACOA have been distinguished scientists and engineers.

I do not think that my constituents in New Jersey, who are constantly faced with problems of toxic waste and water pollution, would consider me a craven cannibal for standing up to defend their rights and to ask that when the President makes an appointment, regardless of the procedure, it be the best-qualified person for the job. We should not be accused of politics because we have asked for a review of someone who will fill critical position on this advisory committee. This committee is a watchdog committee to advise the Congress on atmospheric and ocean programs. The list of people who serve on this committee is a long and distinguished list. They are scientists, they are teachers, they are academicians; they come from walks of life that qualify them to give advice and counsel on these kinds of issues.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I would like to ask the distinguished Senator from North Carolina a quesiton. Has the distinguished Senator from North Carolina ever visited a toxic waste dump?

Mr. EAST. Have I visited a toxic waste dump?

Mr. BRADLEY. Has the Senator from North Carolina ever visited a toxic waste dump?

Mr. EAST. No.

Mr. BRADLEY. Let me tell the Senator a little a bit of what that is like.

Mr. EAST. Well, now, let me ask——

Mr. BRADLEY. No; the Senator answered the question.

Mr. EAST. The Senator asked me a question.

Mr. KENNEDY. Regular order, Mr. President. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. BRADLEY. A typical toxic waste dump makes your eyes start to water, your eyes burn; some places you look around, you see children playing in the fields—families living in nearby homes; at other times you go to a dump and you stay for a while and you get nauseous, you look around and you see children playing in the fields. You see workers at factories and families in homes not far away from a dump. You know the statistics on cancer and birth defects. You ask the people why they don't move. They say they can't afford it. Won't Government help clean up the dumps, they ask. You learn that there are hundreds and hundreds of individuals who are sick each year because of the existence of toxic waste dumps.

We have here a person who was in charge of the program to clean up those toxic waste dumps and for 2 years did nothing. Indeed she subverted the law she was charged with enforcing. She intentionally delayed the cleanup of dumps across this country. Among all the qualified people in this country, the President has again chosen her for responsibility in a program dealing with our environment. If the Senator has never visited a toxic waste dump, I find it very difficult to believe that he could even understand the human dimension of this problem, although I am sure he does as a compassionate individual. But I would ask him to please not charge anyone who disagrees with his view as being a cannibal. Uninformed self-righteousness is an equal danger, particularly if you have never visited a toxic dump site. I think the Senate has spoken very clearly on this from both sides of the aisle. It is a statement that the Senate wants to be on the Record for cleaning up toxic wastes in this country and for having the head of the Environmental Protection Agency be someone who is responsible, who is not going to try to subvert the law that he or she is charged with enforcing.

So I would also call for a little more civility in this process and the Senate can go on and render its judgment. But I urge the Senator to visit a toxic waste dump. There are some in North Carolina. I remember, indeed, when we were considering the first Superfund bill; it was blocked at that time by the other Senator from North Carolina until we uncovered that there were four or five dumps on the Superfund list that were in North Carolina. So I urge the Senator to go visit one of those dumps. I urge him to talk to the people around them. I urge him to answer their questions about why the dumps have not been cleaned up. I urge the Senator to ask himself what is his responsibility as a Senator to see that those dumps are cleaned up. And then I ask him to come back and say that Mrs. Burford should receive this appointment. I do not think he would support her appointment to any environmental advisory committee if he had those experiences.

Mr. EAST. Mr. President, if I could be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. EAST. Whatever response the Senator from New Jersey gives, I have great respect for, but what is my quarrel with him? Well, he recites abstractly the problems that have arisen from toxic waste dumps in the United States. The other Senator from New Jersey says baldness results from it. I do not know that mine did. I do not think it did. But what I am saying is the Senator simply repeats in a very high-flown, rhetorical way the problems of waste dumps. I am not for waste dumps and I am not for toxic poisoning. I am simply saying neither is Anne Burford. The Senator does not relate his conclusions to any evidence connecting her. And therein lies the cannibalism. It is simply appealing to some kind of rank emotion by reciting a chamber of horrors with which no one would agree. I do not agree with it. But the Senator from New Jersey, for whom I have the greatest respect, talks about baldness resulting from it. Well, I regret baldness, too, from whatever source. It happens in the best of families on occasion.

But what I am resistant to—and I do not make light of the point—is that some way or other by reciting this chamber of horrors involving toxic waste, ipso facto that means Ann Burford was responsible. Therein lies the fallacy of the argument. I do not think U.S. Senators, frequently in their conduct that I have seen, can bear up under such scrutiny. And actually their misconduct, which seems ever more evident on occasion and the connection between a horrid thing and their actual involvement in it in a circumstantial evidentiary way is clear, passes unnoticed. But simply to stand here and say EAST has never seen a toxic waste dump and then recite the horrors that can result, such as baldness and so on and so forth, well, of course, I am against that. Who is not, for heaven's sake. Anne Burford is against it. Not one Senator has offered concrete evidence that would stand up in court. They have offered no evidence, period.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield to permit someone to offer some evidence?

Mr. EAST. I will not yield until I am finished. Senators have offered no evidence whatsoever connecting these abstract chamber of horrors. They list specific conduct or misconduct on the part of Mrs. Burford, and therein lies I think the cannibalism and the smell of blood. It is popular. It is politics. It is 1984. And again I am going to defend this woman as having been shabbily treated as I think Donovan was shabbily treated. And the Senator will remember up here—and he agreed with me on Mr. Donovan, for example—they kept surfacing with some underworld figure who would say, "I saw Mr. Donovan with Mafia figure X at restaurant Y back in 1963." The FBI would fan out and found out there was nothing to it. And then they could come back in and they would start all over again. Well, Mr. Donovan survived, thank God, but there were a lot of people who said he ought to get out of the way; he is controversial, but he toughed it out, the President toughed it out with him, and I remember I toughed it out with him.

There were a lot of people who wanted to throw him overboard. But I am saying you keep throwing these people overboard where there is no casual connection between what is asserted and any convincing, conclusive evidence of any kind that they are connected with, call it what you will, I say it is cannibalism.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. EAST. I say it is politics, I say it is craven, I say it is tragic, and I say somebody on the Senate floor from time to time to stand up and call it what it is—cannibalism and politics. That is what I say it is in the case of Anne Burford. There is going to be a lot of rhetoric about toxic waste sites and the impact of them ad infinitum. I am not for toxic waste sites that hurt people, cause baldness, sickness, illness, or anything of that kind. You know I am not. Neither is she. But what has that got to do with our voting on something that does not even involve constitutionally our voting on it? I will tell you why we are doing it. It is politics. To try to dignify it as a great humanitarian cause I say will not wash. It will not wash with me at least, and apparently it did not wash with 18 Senators. I think the Senator from Wyoming again is correct. I yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina asks for evidence linking Mrs. Burford with the failure to clean up toxic wastesites in this country.

I have in my hand the record of the Superfund oversight hearings before the Senate Committee on the Environment, held on April 8, 1983. In that hearing, two of the highest career officials in the EPA who are responsible for implementation of the Superfund Program testified under oath that there was a policy in the administration at the time that Mrs. Burford was the Administrator not to aggressively expend funds and clean up sites, in the hope that when this program expired, there would still be money left in the fund, so the argument could be made: "We do not have to reauthorize the Superfund because, look here, we did not even spend all the money that we have."

I want to read to the Senator at least one of the statements under oath. He has asked for evidence, and I am responding now to his inquiry.

Asked for examples of how the slowdown occurred and the lack of aggressiveness occurred, one of the witnesses testified:

One thing that has concerned me since I have been involved in this program is the difficulty that the States have had in coming up with a 10 percent match.

I now interrupt the quotation to point out that, under the law, the States have to provide a certain amount of matching money, and those of us on the committee who dealt with it understand that this has proved to be a very serious impediment to the effective cleanup of the waste sites because of the inability of the States to come up with matching funds.

I continue to quote:

My office and I tried to come up with alternative schemes that we could share with the States to develop funding programs or funding support mechanisms that could get over this 10-percent hurdle.

I found that as I pursued them, was suggested that I find something else to do; that essentially, a State was going to be given the opportunity from the Fund to get 90 cents on the dollar and it should be up to them to pursue the other 10 cents in whatever way they saw fit, but that we should not take an aggressive role in attempting to help the States come up with initiatives or ideas to augment that 10 percent.

Senator MITCHELL. Mr. Hedeman, who suggested that to you?

Mr. HEDEMAN. The Administrator did.

The Administrator at the time was Mrs. Burford.

I will not read all that testimony. I invite the Senator—I urge the Senator—to read this transcript and to read other transcripts before the Senate Committee on the Environment, which conducted oversight hearings of the supervision of the implementation of the Superfund program, and then come back to the Senate floor and say, "There is no evidence. Where is the evidence?"

I say to the Senator that this program, by all accounts, by now virtually unanimous consent and agreement, was seriously mismanaged and maladministered during the time Mrs. Burford served as Administrator. Virtually no progress was made as a direct result of the deliberate policy which I have just described—a policy, I repeat, not to clean up sites—and that was one the major causes of her leaving office.

She has since been replaced, and I might say that the person who was the direct Administrator of the Superfund has since left office. They both have been replaced by able, outstanding persons, both nominated by the President, approved by the Senate, and now doing a very able and aggressive job.

However, none of that obscures the fact that during her term in office, this very important legislation dealing with what the Agency, itself, now acknowledges to be some 20,000 abandoned hazardous waste sites in this country was in a virtual standstill as a direct result of the deliberate policy during her administration.

I say to the Senator that that alone, if nothing else were in the RECORD, ought to be sufficient for this nomination to be withdrawn by the President. I believe that sincerely.

I will say one final thing. The Commission to which she has been appointed is not a nominal Commission, as it has been referred to here by the Senator. It is a very important Commission. It advises the President and Congress on important environmental matters.

Until this appointment, Presidents of both parties have nominated very able and distinguished persons to that Commission, most of them scientists, without regard to partisanship. There were no political persons placed on this Commission before this. This has the effect, if it goes over, of establishing that political precedent, which I think we will all come to regret; because, whatever our disagreements, I believe we all share a commitment to providing a healthy environment for the American people.

I urge the Senator to take a look at this transcript. I have cited a brief portion of it. I think that, in its totality, it makes a very compelling case.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I want to remind my colleague from North Carolina that this is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

He complains of it being considered without hearings being held. I have asked for hearings. On July 3, I sent a letter to the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, requesting hearings on this appointment. I did so because I felt it was a totally misguided appointment, based on the requirements of the job, and the qualifications of the nominee.

I hope the Senator from North Carolina will rethink his comments about baldness. His baldness may be associated with age. I am talking about the baldness of 3-, 4-, 5-, 6-, and 7-year-old children who are rendered bald by chemotherapy; who are being treated for disease, because they lived in areas in close proximity to toxic waste sites.

There is nothing more heart wrenching than seeing the baldness of a child walking out of a clinic after a chemotherapy treatment, or a roomfull of such children, as one witness described before the Environment and Public Works Committee. He said there is only one thing worse than taking a child on the subway and having people gawk at him; having children snicker at him. That is to walk into a roomful of children getting chemotherapy.

I am sure the Senator from North Carolina did not mean to offend the parents of those children when he made the reference he did about his own baldness, in comparing it to theirs.

Mr. EAST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I yield.

Mr. EAST. Is the junior Senator from New Jersey a lawyer?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. No. I am a businessman by training, but I understand my responsibility. I answered the Senator's question, did I not? If I may continue, I have answered the question.

Mr. EAST. When the Senator is——

Mr. KENNEDY. May we have order, Mr. President? The Senator is entitled to be heard without interruption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The politics of this issue, in my view, is politics at its best. This is the politics of accountability. That is our responsibility and that, I submit, is the issue here. I urge the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. EAST. Mr. President, I feel that I have a responsibility to respond to the Senator from Maine, for whom I have the greatest respect, and to the junior Senator from New Jersey, for whom I have the greatest respect.

First, let me deal with the Senator from Maine, who I gather has now lost the floor, having made some inquiry as to my sentiments on certain matters, perhaps showing a somewhat indifference to my response, in any case. I do not know. Perhaps he had pressing business. I certainly do not question his motivation.

The Senator is back on the floor. I have the greatest respect for the Senator from Maine.

What surprises me slightly is this: As a former Federal district court judge of great distinction and obviously as a lawyer of great ability and distinction, I think he can appreciate that what I am driving at, as a trained lawyer myself—and this is what I think escapes the junior Senator from New Jersey, with all due respect to him—is the correlation between guilt and produced and convincing evidence.

The Senator from Maine, I think, appreciates that the atmosphere in which this is being done is hardly one in which you could objectively conclude that reasonable minds would not differ, that reasonable minds would certainly conclude, that Anne Burford, herself, was directly responsible for all the excesses that may exist in this country or in particular areas growing out of the administration of the toxic waste dump program.

I am simply saying that you could get witnesses on both sides. There were those who contended that she tried quite hard and labored quite hard. It is like the whole environmental issue. It is a big political year, and the constant rhetoric goes on, that the President or this person or that is not committed genuinely—they said Mr. Watt was not—to environmental issues. But there are others, including the President and myself, who contend that that simply is not the case.

I am simply suggesting that in the case of Anne Burford, there were witnesses on both sides. There were those who say she was pressing it. There were those who say she was not. But certainly a former Federal district court judge would realize, in the brief time, in the highly charged political atmosphere we have here, with no real, direct, convincing evidence, that to treat a person in this fashion, as one might treat a person in the dock in the courtroom, is unfair, and I will not yield on that point.

Having said that about the comments of the Senator from Maine, let me say this about the Senator from New Jersey, for whom, again I repeat, I have the greatest admiration.

I am not making light, and I said so, of whatever tragedies, baldness or otherwise—and I made that clear at that time, so do not suggest or imply I did not—I was not making light of any tragedy that might have grown out of or might grow out of the toxic waste problem in this country. I am simply saying that to read off a litany in the abstract of some of the horrible things that may have occurred—I do not know.

The Senator speaks very generally, but to automatically assume because those things may exist, I do not know, that Anne Burford is directly and personally responsible, no responsible attorney would accept that. And I think as a fair-minded man, the Senator from New Jersey knows what I am talking about as his distinguished senior colleague knows was the problem we had with Mr. Donovan. People kept coming up with the idea that some way or other the Secretary of Labor was associated with underworld figures. And it was tried over and over again to make that connection. They could never do it. It did not stick. It was politics.

I am suggesting in the case of Anne Burford, that there are people who may agree that she did a good job of administering, there may be those who say she did not. I am simply saying we have not had a fair, objective assessment of that in any reasonable way. And certainly a distinguished former district court judge would know exactly what I am talking about.

I will come back to my fundamental premise. I think all of this session and the ones that follow are going to be filled with highly charged political issues, having nothing to do with genuine, substantive matters we ought to be dealing with. And this is one right here. It does not require our confirmation. It is a Presidential nominee.

I think individual Senators can stand up on the floor and object to it or to enter statements into the RECORD. But I think to come in here with resolutions and condemnations and to bog us down for several hours, no matter how piously you state it, no matter how much you try to appeal to the emotional side, you will not be able to establish any kind of convincing evidence that there is a direct correlation between the conduct of Anne Burford and the horrors you cite abstractly. And therein lieth the nub of my complaint. And I think it is unfair to her, as it was to Mr. Donovan, as it was to Mr. Watt.

I consider it an honor and a responsibility to defend people who are caught up in the sharklike, cannibalistic atmosphere of this city. And now and then it even happens to one of our own colleagues. Sometimes our own colleagues escape it because a different standard is applied.

I thought at the time the lady was treated shabbily. I think she is being treated shabbily today. Now there may be those of you here who say she is not. So be it. But I want to be on the record as saying I think so. And brother Watt was, and brother Donovan was, and brother Allen was, and there will be many more to come—Democrat, Republican, liberal, conservative—because the sharks smell blood and the media loves it.

I think it ought to be condemned. I do not think it is in the best traditions of the greatest, allegedly, deliberative body in America which ought to have a sense of dignity about it in terms of dealing in an orderly fashion with genuine legislative business rather than a lot of political grandstanding in a Presidential election year, in a major election year. And that is what it is. That is exactly what it is, I say, with all due respect to my colleagues. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know many of my colleagues are anxious to vote and I will make just a brief comment and then yield the floor for a vote.

I certainly agree with the Senator from North Carolina that there is a political atmosphere existing today, and in this body. I believe he will also agree that that is not a unique situation. That has existed on many previous occasions here and will exist on many occasions in the future. This is a political institution and, unfortunately, oftentimes statements are made that have a political content and a political objective. Nobody disagrees with that.

I further agree that this is not a court of law and the rules that apply in a court of law do not apply here. That may or may not be unfortunate depending upon one's point of view.

I merely would point out that my statement offering some evidence was a direct response to the Senator's suggestion that there was no evidence on the other side of the question. In his most recent remarks, he has commented that there is evidence now on both sides and evidence with respect to which reasonable men may disagree. And assuming that all Senators are reasonable people—an assumption, I might add, that all American people may not share but, nonetheless, we can make here—then we have a division in the Senate and there is reasonable disagreement.

But the fact is that the Senator repeatedly and insistently challenged those who hold a contrary view to offer some evidence making that connection. And my response was merely in direct response to that inquiry and established, what I believe, after careful review of the RECORD and having participated personally in all of the hearings in question, to be a clear, convincing and overwhelming record of ineptitude, maladministration and failure to pursue the implementation of this important law to the severe detriment, not only of those people who live near hazardous waste sites, but to the severe detriment of all Americans, who overwhelmingly in election after election, poll after poll, have demonstrated their support for clean air, pure water, and unpoisoned land, something we all share.

I yield the floor.

That this section may be cited as the "Comprehensive Forfeiture Act of 1984".

TITLE I

SEC. 101. Section 1963 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1963. Criminal penalties

"(a) Whoever violates any provision of section 1962 of this chapter shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both, and shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of State law—

"(1) any interest the person has acquired or maintained in violation of section 1962;

"(2) any—

"(A) interest in;

"(B) security of;

"(C) claim against; or

"(D) property or contractual right of any kind affording a source of influence over;

any enterprise which the person has established, operated, controlled, conducted, or participated in the conduct of, in violation of section 1962; and

"(3) any property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds which the person obtained, directly or indirectly, from racketeering activity or unlawful debt collection in violation of section 1962.

The court, in imposing sentence on such person shall order, in addition to any other sentence imposed pursuant to this section, that the person forfeit to the United States all property described in this subsection.

"(b) Property subject to criminal forfeiture under this section includes—

"(1) real property, including things growing on, affixed to, and found in land; and

"(2) tangible and intangible personal property, including rights, privileges, interests, claims, and securities.

"(c) All right, title, and interest in property described in subsection (a) vests in the United States upon the commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section. Any such property that is subsequently transferred to a person other than the defendant may be the subject of a special verdict of forfeiture and thereafter shall be ordered forfeited to the United States, unless the transferee establishes in a hearing pursuant to subsection (m) that he is a bona fide purchaser for value of such property who at the time of purchase was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(d) If any of the property described in subsection (a)—

"(1) cannot be located;

"(2) has been transferred to, sold to, or deposited with, a third party;

"(3) has been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the court;

"(4) has been substantially diminished in value by any act or omission of the defendant; or

"(5) has been commingled with other property which cannot be divided without difficulty;

the court shall order the forfeiture of any other property of the defendant up to the value of any property described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

"(e)(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of a satisfactory performance bond, or take any other action to preserve the availability of property described in subsection (a) for forfeiture under this section—

"(A) upon the filing of an indictment or information charging a violation of section 1962 of this chapter and alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section; or

"(B) prior to the filing of such an indictment or information, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

"(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

"(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered:

Provided, however, That an order entered pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall be effective for not more than ninety days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown or unless an indictment or information described in subparagraph (A) has been filed.

"(2) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when an information or indictment has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than ten days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time, and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

"(3) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"(f) Upon conviction of a person under this section, the court shall enter a judgment of forfeiture of the property to the United States and shall also authorize the Attorney General to seize all property ordered forfeited upon such terms and conditions as the court shall deem proper. Following the entry of an order declaring the property forfeited, the court may, upon application of the United States, enter such appropriate restraining orders or injunctions, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to protect the interest of the United States in the property ordered forfeited. Any income accruing to, or derived from, an enterprise or an interest in an enterprise which has been ordered forfeited under this section may be used to offset ordinary and necessary expenses to the enterprise which are required by law, or which are necessary to protect the interests of the United States or third parties.

"(g) Following the seizure of property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General shall direct the disposition of the property by sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of any innocent persons. Any property right or interest not exercisable by, or transferable for value to, the United States shall expire and shall not revert to the defendant, nor shall the defendant or any person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant be eligible to purchase forfeited property at any sale held by the United States. Upon application of a person, other than the defendant or a person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant, the court may restrain or stay the sale or disposition of the property pending the conclusion of any appeal of the criminal case giving rise to the forfeiture, if the applicant demonstrates that proceeding with the sale or disposition of the property will result in irreparable injury, harm or loss to him. Notwithstanding 31 U.S.C. 3302(b), the proceeds of any sale or other disposition of property forfeited under this section and any moneys forfeited shall be used to pay all proper expenses for the forfeiture and the sale, including expenses of seizure, maintenance and custody of the property pending its disposition, advertising and court costs. The Attorney General shall deposit in the Treasury any amounts of such proceeds or moneys remaining after the payment of such expenses.

"(h) With respect to property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General is authorized to—

"(1) grant petitions for mitigation or remission of forfeiture, restore forfeited property to victims of a violation of this chapter, or take any other action to protect the rights of innocent persons which is in the interest of justice and which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter;

"(2) compromise claims arising under this section;

"(3) award compensation to persons providing information resulting in a forfeiture under this section;

"(4) direct the disposition by the United States of all property ordered forfeited under this section by public sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of innocent persons; and

"(5) take appropriate measures necessary to safeguard and maintain property ordered forfeited under this section pending its disposition.

"(i) The Attorney General may promulgate regulations with respect to—

"(1) making reasonable efforts to provide notice to persons who may have an interest in property ordered forfeited under this section;

"(2) granting petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture;

"(3) the restitution of property to victims of an offense petitioning for remission or mitigation of forfeiture under this chapter;

"(4) the disposition by the United States of forfeited property by public sale or other commercially feasible means;

"(5) the maintenance and safekeeping of any property forfeited under this section pending its disposition; and

"(6) the compromise of claims arising under this chapter.

Pending the promulgation of such regulations, all provisions of law relating to the disposition of property, or the proceeds from the sale thereof, or the remission or mitigation of forfeitures for violation of the customs laws, and the compromise of claims and the award of compensation to informers in respect of such forfeitures shall apply to forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under the provisions of this section, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions hereof. Such duties as are imposed upon the Customs Service or any person with respect to the disposition of property under the customs law shall be performed under this chapter by the Attorney General.

"(j) Except as provided in subsection (m), no party claiming an interest in property subject to forfeiture under this section may—

"(1) intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal case involving the forfeiture of such property under this section; or

"(2) commence an action at law or equity against the United States concerning the validity of his alleged interest in the property subsequent to the filing of an indictment or information alleging that the property is subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(k) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter orders as provided in this section without regard to the location of any property which may be subject to forfeiture under this section or which has been ordered forfeited under this section.

"(l) In order to facilitate the identification or location of property declared forfeited and to facilitate the disposition of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, after the entry of an order declaring property forfeited to the United States the court may, upon application of the United States, order that the testimony of any witness relating to the property forfeited be taken by deposition and that any designated book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material not privileged be produced at the same time and place, in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions under Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(m)(1) Following the entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the United States shall publish notice of the order and of its intent to dispose of the property for at least seven successive court days in such manner as the Attorney General may direct. The Government may also, to the extent practicable, provide direct written notice to any person known to have alleged an interest in the property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture as a substitute for published notice as to those persons so notified.

"(2) Any person, other than the defendant, asserting a legal interest in property which has been ordered forfeited to the United States pursuant to this section may, within thirty days of the final publication of notice or his receipt of notice under paragraph (1), whichever is earlier, petition the court for a hearing to adjudicate the validity of his alleged interest in the property. The hearing shall be held before the court alone, without a jury.

"(3) The petition shall be signed by the petitioner under penalty of perjury and shall set forth the nature and extent of the petitioner's right, title, or interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of the right, title, or interest in the property, any additional facts supporting the petitioner's claim, and the relief sought.

"(4) The hearing on the petition shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of justice, be held within thirty days of the filing of the petition. The court may consolidate the hearing on the petition with a hearing on any other petition filed by a person other than the defendant under this subsection.

"(5) At the hearing, the petitioner may testify and present evidence and witnesses on his own behalf, and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. The United States may present evidence and witnesses in rebuttal and in defense of its claim to the property and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. In addition to testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, the court shall consider the relevant portions of the record of the criminal case which resulted in the order of forfeiture.

"(6) If, after the hearing, the court determines that the petitioner has established by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the petitioner has a legal right, title, or interest in the property, and such right, title, or interest renders the order of forfeiture invalid in whole or in part because the right, title, or interest was vested in the petitioner rather than the defendant or was superior to any right, title, or interest of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts which gave rise to the forfeiture of the property under this section; or

"(B) the petitioner is a bona fide purchaser for value of the right, title, or interest in the property and was at the time of purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section;

"(7) Following the court's disposition of all petitions filed under this subsection, or if no such petitions are filed following the expiration of the period provided in paragraph (2) for the filing of such petitions, the United States shall have clear title to property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture and may warrant good title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee.".

TITLE II

SEC. 201. Part D of title II of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 841 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections 413 and 414:

"CRIMINAL FORFEITURES

"PROPERTY SUBJECT TO CRIMINAL FORFEITURE

"SEC. 413. (a) Any person convicted of a violation of this title or title III punishable by imprisonment for more than one year shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of State law—

"(1) any property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds the person obtained, directly or indirectly, as the result of such violation;

"(2) any of the person's property used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit, or to facilitate the commission of, such violation; and

"(3) in the case of a person convicted of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise in violation of section 408 of this title (21 U.S.C. 848), the person shall forfeit, in addition to any property described in paragraph (1) or (2), any of his interest in, claims against, and property or contractual rights affording a source of control over, the continuing criminal enterprise.

The court, in imposing sentence on such person, shall order, in addition to any other sentence imposed pursuant to this title or title III, that the person forfeit to the United States all property described in this subsection.

"MEANING OF TERM 'PROPERTY'

"(b) Property subject to criminal forfeiture under this section includes—

"(1) real property, including things growing on, affixed to, and found in land; and

"(2) tangible and intangible personal property, including rights, privileges, interests, claims, and securities.

"THIRD PARTY TRANSFERS

"(c) All right, title, and interest in property described in subsection (a) vests in the United States upon the commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section. Any such property that is subsequently transferred to a person other than the defendant may be the subject of a special verdict of forfeiture and thereafter shall be ordered forfeited to the United States, unless the transferee establishes in a hearing pursuant to subsection (o) that he is a bona fide purchaser for value of such property who at the time of purchase was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(d) If any of the property described in subsection (a)—

"(1) cannot be located;

"(2) has been transferred to, sold to, or deposited with a third party;

"(3) has been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the court;

"(4) has been substantially diminished in value by any act or omission of the defendant; or

"(5) has been commingled with other property which cannot be divided without difficulty;

the court shall order the forfeiture of any other property of the defendant up to the value of any property described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

"REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION

"(e) There is a rebuttable presumption at trial that any property of a person convicted of a felony under this title or title III is subject to forfeiture under this section if the United States establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(1) such property was acquired by such person during the period of the violation of this title or title III or within a reasonable time after such period; and

"(2) there was no likely source for such property other than the violation of this title or title III.

"PROTECTIVE ORDERS

"(f)(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of a satisfactory performance bond, or take any other action to preserve the availability of property described in subsection (a) for forfeiture under this section—

"(A) upon the filing of an indictment or information charging a violation of this title or title III for which criminal forfeiture may be ordered under this section and alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section; or

"(B) prior to the filing of such an indictment or information, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

"(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

"(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered:

Provided, however, That an order entered pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall be effective for not more than ninety days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown or unless an indictment or information described in subparagraph (A) has been filed.

"(2) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when information or an indictment has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than ten days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

"(3) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"WARRANT OF SEIZURE

"(g) The Government may request the issuance of a warrant authorizing the seizure of property subject to forfeiture under this section in the same manner as provided for a search warrant. If the court determines that there is probable cause to believe that the property to be seized would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture and that an order under subsection (f) may not be sufficient to assure the availability of the property for forfeiture, the court shall issue a warrant authorizing the seizure of such property.

"EXECUTION

"(h) Upon entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the court shall authorize the Attorney General to seize all property ordered forfeited upon such terms and conditions as the court shall deem proper. Following entry of an order declaring the property forfeited, the court may, upon application of the United States, enter such appropriate restraining orders or injunctions, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to protect the interest of the United States in the property ordered forfeited. Any income accruing to or derived from property ordered forfeited under this section may be used to offset ordinary and necessary expenses to the property which are required by law, or which are necessary to protect the interests of the United States or third parties.

"DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY

"(i) Following the seizure of property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General shall direct the disposition of the property by sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of any innocent persons. Any property right or interest not exercisable by, or transferable for value to, the United States shall expire and shall not revert to the defendant, nor shall the defendant or any person acting in concert with him or on his behalf be eligible to purchase forfeited property at any sale held by the United States. Upon application of a person, other than the defendant or a person acting in concert with him or on his behalf, the court may restrain or stay the sale or disposition of the property pending the conclusion of any appeal of the criminal case giving rise to the forfeiture, if the applicant demonstrates that proceeding with the sale or disposition of the property will result in irreparable injury, harm, or loss to him.

"AUTHORITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

"(j) With respect to property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General is authorized to—

"(1) grant petitions for mitigation or remission of forfeiture, restore forfeited property to victims of a violation of this chapter, or take any other action to protect the rights of innocent persons which is in the interest of justice and which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this section;

"(2) compromise claims arising under this section;

"(3) award compensation to persons providing information resulting in a forfeiture under this section;

"(4) direct the disposition by the United States, in accordance with the provisions of section 511(e) of this title (21 U.S.C. 881(e)), of all property ordered forfeited under this section by public sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of innocent persons; and

"(5) take appropriate measures necessary to safeguard and maintain property ordered forfeited under this section pending its disposition.

"APPLICABILITY OF CIVIL FORFEITURE PROVISIONS

"(k) Except to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of this section, the provisions of section 511(d) of this title (21 U.S.C. 881(d)) shall apply to a criminal forfeiture under this section.

"BAR ON INTERVENTION

"(l) Except as provided in subsection (o), no party claiming an interest in property subject to forfeiture under this section may—

"(1) intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal case involving the forfeiture of such property under this section; or

"(2) commence an action at law or equity against the United States concerning the validity of his alleged interest in the property subsequent to the filing of an indictment or information alleging that the property is subject to forfeiture under this section.

"JURISDICTION TO ENTER ORDERS

"(m) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter orders as provided in this section without regard to the location of any property which may be subject to forfeiture under this section or which has been ordered forfeited under this section.

"DEPOSITIONS

"(n) In order to facilitate the identification and location of property declared forfeited and to facilitate the disposition of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, after the entry of an order declaring property forfeited to the United States, the court may, upon application of the United States, order that the testimony of any witness relating to the property forfeited be taken by deposition and that any designated book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material not privileged be produced at the same time and place, in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions under Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"THIRD PARTY INTERESTS

"(o)(1) Following the entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the United States shall publish notice of the order and of its intent to dispose of the property for at least seven successive court days in such manner as the Attorney General may direct. The Government may also, to the extent practicable, provide direct written notice to any person known to have alleged an interest in the property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture as a substitute for published notice as to those persons so notified.

"(2) Any person, other than the defendant, asserting a legal interest in property which has been ordered forfeited to the United States pursuant to this section may, within thirty days of the final publication of notice or his receipt of notice under paragraph (1), whichever is earlier, petition the court for a hearing to adjudicate the validity of his alleged interest in the property. The hearing shall be held before the court alone, without a jury.

"(3) The petition shall be signed by the petitioner under penalty of perjury and shall set forth the nature and extent of the petitioner's right, title, or interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of the right, title, or interest in the property, any additional facts supporting the petitioner's claim, and the relief sought.

"(4) The hearing on the petition shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of justice, be held within thirty days of the filing of the petition. The court may consolidate the hearing on the petition with a hearing on any other petition filed by a person other than the defendant under this subsection.

"(5) At the hearing, the petitioner may testify and present evidence and witnesses on his own behalf, and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. The United States may present evidence and witnesses in rebuttal and in defense of its claim to the property and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. In addition to testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, the court shall consider the relevant portions of the record of the criminal case which resulted in the order of forfeiture.

"(6) If, after the hearing, the court determines that the petitioner has established by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the petitioner has a legal right, title, or interest in the property, and such right, title, or interest renders the order of forfeiture invalid in whole or in part because the right, title, or interest was vested in the petitioner rather than the defendant or was superior to any right, title, or interest of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts which gave rise to the forfeiture of the property under this section; or the court shall amend the order of forfeiture in accordance with its determination.

"(B) the petitioner is a bona fide purchaser for value of the right, title, or interest in the property and was at the time of purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section;

"(7) Following the court's disposition of all petitions filed under this subsection, or if no such petitions are filed following the expiration of the period provided in paragraph (2) for the filing of such petitions, the United States shall have clear title to property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture and may warrant good title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee.

"(p) The provisions of this section shall be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.

"INVESTMENT OF ILLICIT DRUG PROFITS

"SEC. 414. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a violation of this title or title III punishable by imprisonment for more than one year in which such person has participated as a principal within the meaning of section 2 of title 18, United States Code, to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce. A purchase of securities on the open market for purposes of investment, and without the intention of controlling or participating in the control of the issuer, or of assisting another to do so, shall not be unlawful under this section if the securities of the issuer held by the purchaser, the members of his immediate family, and his or their accomplices in any violation of this title or title III after such purchase do not amount in the aggregate to 1 per centum of the outstanding securities of any one class, and do not confer, either in law or in fact, the power to elect one or more directors of the issuer.

"(b) Whoever violates this section shall be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"(c) As used in this section, the term 'enterprise' includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity.

"(d) The provisions of this section shall be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.".

Section 304 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 824) is amended by adding at the end of subsection (f) the following sentence: "All right, title, and interest in such controlled substances shall vest in the United States upon a revocation order becoming final.".

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, I have discussed this amendment with Senator ABDNOR and Senator DECONCINI, the chairman and ranking member of the Treasury Subcommittee. I have also discussed it with Chairman HATFIELD. A cosponsor of the amendment is the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, as is the ranking Democratic member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN.

The language is long overdue and greatly needed to solve a problem that continues to get worse. The amendment would improve governmental efficiency; it would reduce costs and increase revenues to the Government; it would also improve our drug interdiction and law enforcement capabilities.

Madam President, as many of our Members know, the Coast Guard, the Customs Service, the Drug Enforcement Administration, and other agencies seize over 9,000 vessels, vehicles, and aircraft each year. Most of these vessels are used in the transportation of illegal aliens and narcotics. All of them are seized because they have been used in the commission of a crime. The Government machinery and the Federal law established to recycle these properties to their rightful owner or to a proper use is so antiquated that many of the vessels and other equipment diminish in value because of poor maintenance and vandalism. According to a recent GAO report, forfeited vehicles sold for only 58 percent of their value at the time of seizure. Boats sold for only 43 percent of their value at the time of seizure, and aircraft sold for only 35 percent of their value at the time of seizure.

Madam President, the amendment is identical to title III of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act that has passed the Senate twice. This legislation passed on September 30, 1982, by a vote of 95 to 1 and passed again on February 2, 1984, by a vote of 91 to 1. Title III of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act is supported by the administration, specifically by OMB, Justice, Treasury, and GSA. I would not offer this amendment if the regular legislative process were working better and we were moving toward needed crime legislation.

The amendment would permit most of the seized property to be forfeited and disposed of by an administrative process which would greatly reduce the amount of time required. Now even in an uncontested case, it takes an average of 18 months of court time. This amendment would free up valuable court time, it would increase net receipts to the Government, and it would put property back into useful service more quickly. It would make it possible for State and local governments that participated in the seizure of the property to acquire it, and it would set up a revolving fund to help finance the maintenance and security of the property, thereby helping to eliminate the requirement of law enforcement agencies to spend their funds intended to be used in the war against crime instead to secure and maintain seized property.

More specifically, the amendment would streamline the disposal process by making a number of changes:

First, it would increase from $10,000 to $100,000 the value of the property that would use the administrative forfeiture proceedings. Not only is this faster, but it also helps relieve already crowded courts.

Second, the bond required to appeal for a judicial proceeding is increased from $250 to $5,000 or 10 percent of the value of the property, whichever is larger. Property rights are protected by publishing notice of the seized property and giving written notice to all parties who appear to have an interest.

Third, it would increase from $50,000 to $150,000 the maximum amount of a reward that may be paid for information leading to a forfeiture.

The bill also creates a Customs fund to be available to defray expenses associated with forfeiture actions. Receipts from disposal of forfeited property would be deposited in the fund to be used to secure, maintain, and sell the property.

Finally, another important feature of the amendment is that it enhances cooperation between Federal and State and local law enforcement agencies by permitting the transfer of federally-forfeited property to State and local governments which participated in the action which led to the seizure. It also permits the transfer of the property to a State or local government prior to Federal forfeiture and forfeiture then proceeds under State law.

It is difficult to explain to a sheriff, whose tip allowed the seizure of a plane that dopers were using, why he cannot use that plane to seize other dope; that because of red tape in Federal regulations, he cannot be allowed to use that plane. At the same time, he has the opportunity to watch that plane sitting there for 18 months or 2 years and being destroyed by vandals or rot and being sold for one-third of its value. That is disheartening, and it discourages State and local law enforcement agencies from participating.

Madam President, I am delighted to be able to offer this amendment with the Senator from Delaware. He has authored much of the language in the amendment. The Judiciary Committee made great improvements in a forfeiture provision that was offered earlier. Of course, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, as well as Senator NUNN, have worked long and hard with me, and Senator DECONCINI and Senator ABDNOR have been interested in this matter. But the Senator from Delaware has long been interested in this subject and the overall package, and I congratulate him on the work he has done on this particular amendment and in the overall crime package. We seek now to get some movement, because we see the crime package languishing in the House.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Florida for his kind comments. The forfeiture provision that is being ordered as an amendment to H.R. 5798, the Treasury appropriations bill, is one of the most important components of the crime package that Chairman THURMOND and I have been trying to get enacted into law for the past 4 years.

This amendment is identical to S. 948, which I introduced on March 24, 1983, as amended by the Senate on February 3, 1984, when it passed the Senate by unanimous consent. It is also identical to the forfeiture title of the bipartisan crime package, which was introduced by Chairman THURMOND and myself, and which passed the Senate by a vote of 91 to 1 on February 2, 1984. And it is essentially the same forfeiture language that passed the Senate and the House in the 97th Congress only to be vetoed by President Reagan along with the rest of the crime package.

Our Democratic colleagues in the House are less than anxious to move this measure, for reasons, quite frankly, that confound me. I do not understand it. So we are taking a piece of it and putting it on this bill, and it is a very important piece.

The purpose of this legislation is to enhance the power of law enforcement to confiscate the criminally obtained assets of drug trafficking and organized crime operations. It will make law enforcement better able to forfeit everything from the cars, boats, and planes used by drug smugglers, all the way up to the financial empires of the major drug trafficking and organized crime operations. It is these major operations that the bill is primarily intended to attack. Law enforcement officials have told us time and time again that you can cut off the head of a drug trafficking operation by putting its leaders in jail, but if you do not get the financial assets, a new head will grow as new leaders come up through the system to replace those in jail.

This legislation will help law enforcement to get at those assets, giving us a tool we absolutely must have if we are ever going to seriously challenge sophisticated drug traffickers and organized crime.

I personally have been urging law enforcement to concentrate on forfeiture since the 96th Congress when I introduced the first version of this legislation. In April 1980, as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, I chaired hearings on the subject of the Government's efforts to obtain the assets of major drug traffickers. In April 1981, I received the raw materials for putting together a forfeiture bill when the General Accounting Office released a report that was done at my request entitled "Asset forfeiture—A Seldom Used Tool in Combatting Drug Trafficking."

The central conclusion of the hearings that I chaired, and of the GAO report, was that since enactment in 1970 of the first Federal criminal forfeiture statutes—which are contained in the racketeer-influenced and corrupt organizations statute, commonly known as RICO, and the Comprehensive Drug Prevention and Control Act—the Federal Government's record in taking the profit out of organized crime, especially drug trafficking, has been far below Congress' expectations. For example, although drug trafficking was estimated in 1981 to be a $60 billion a year business, in its report the GAO found that between 1970 and 1980 only $2 billion in assets had been turned over to the U.S. Treasury. The GAO also concluded that a major reason for the failure of these statutes, which were in 1970 proclaimed as the ideal weapon for breaking the backs of sophisticated narcotics operations, was that the Justice Department has largely ignored the legislation. In addition, when Justice did get around to pursuing forfeitures, it ran into unanticipated legal snags.

There is no doubt that, due to persistent urging by some of us in Congress, the Justice Department is now taking forfeiture much more seriously than it did during the first 10 years the forfeiture laws were on the books. But with drug trafficking now estimated to be approaching the $100 billion a year mark: with the purity level of heroin rising significantly over the last decade; with emergency room admittances for heroin overdoses more than doubling in the last 5 years; with the average narcotics addict committing an average of 3.6 crimes per week; and with almost one-third of State prison inmates saying they had been under the influence of an illegal drug when they committed their crimes, it is clear that we have not yet had a significant impact on the drug problem.

I think it is time to add forfeiture, the toughest drug enforcement weapon we have, to our arsenal.

The forfeiture amendment is divided into four major sections. First, it would amend RICO. Most important, it would:

First, make clear that the proceeds of racketeering activity are subject to criminal forfeiture, thereby overcoming appellate court decisions holding that proceeds and profits are not interests within the meaning of RICO;

Second, provide a fuller definition of the types of property subject to RICO forfeiture;

Third, provide that title to forfeitable property vests in the United States upon commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture;

Fourth, add a section providing that if forfeitable property cannot be located, or has been transferred or sold, substitute assets belonging to the defendant can be forfeited;

Fifth, provide judicial power to issue appropriate protective orders to maintain availability of potentially forfeitable property; and

Sixth, provide for orderly consideration of third-party claims, taking into account the requirements of due process.

The second major section of the bill would add a criminal forfeiture statute to the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act, which would in almost all respects parallel the RICO statute as amended.

Third, the bill would create a forfeiture fund for the Department of Justice to permit efficient administration of the forfeiture program.

Finally, the bill would amend the civil forfeiture provisions of the Tariff Act to allow the U.S. Customs Service and the Drug Enforcement Administration to process civil forfeiture actions more efficiently, and to allow those agencies to transfer forfeited property to State and local law enforcement agencies who assist them in order to boost Federal-State cooperation. It would also create a forfeiture fund for the U.S. Customs Service.

As many believed in 1970, I still believe that a strong forfeiture statute that is actively implemented is the most effective weapon we have for breaking the backs of sophisticated drug traffickers. I believe that this forfeiture language, which has been improved and refined on a number of occasions over the past 4 years, will serve that purpose, even beyond what was intended originally.

I thank my colleagues, and I thank the Chair for its indulgence.

Mr. ABDNOR. Madam President, I am delighted to support the amendment. It is an excellent amendment. I move its adoption.

Mr. DECONCINI. Madam President, I likewise support the amendment, and I wish to call attention of the Senate to this amendment, that it has passed, as I understand—and I will ask the Senator from Delaware to verify this—on two separate occasions in this body.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DECONCINI. And it has passed the House of Representatives on one separate occasion and was presented to the President in the full crime bill in the last Congress, and for other reasons it was vetoed.

So we have a bill here that has unanimous support that is very important to law enforcement.

I am pleased to cosponsor it and approve the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further debate?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment (No. 3391) was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment as agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Madam President, I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Madam President, there is a matter in negotiation now on another bill that I had planned to ask unanimous consent to take up briefly and to which an amendment would be offered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM].

I had hoped to do that now because I anticipate there might be a request for the yeas and nays on an amendment and I wish to do it as soon as possible.

Could I inquire, first, of the Senator from Michigan how long he will take on the matter that he now wishes to address to the Senate?

Mr. LEVIN. I understand it is going to be accepted by the managers. It should take no more than 5 minutes.

Mr. BAKER. Very well.

During that 5 minutes, then, I will continue my conversations with the Senator from Ohio and with the Senator from New York and others and see if we can work this out.

Senators should be on notice there is at least the possibility of a rollcall vote on another matter not related to the pending business.

I thank the Senator from Michigan for yielding.

AMENDMENT NO. 3392

(Purpose: To increase the limitation on the availability of funds to be made available from the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund)

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration..

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] for himself and Mr. HUMPHREY proposes an amendment numbered 3392.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 32, strike out lines 18 through 25 and on page 33 strike out lines 1 through 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE TRANSACTION FUND

Limitation on Availability of Funds

During the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, not more than $250,000,000 in addition to amounts previously appropriated, all to remain available until expended, may be obligated from amounts in the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund for the acquisition of strategic and critical materials under section 6(a)(1) of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (50 U.S.C. 98e(a)(1)) and for transportation and other incidental expenses related to such acquisition.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I offer this amendment on behalf of Senator HUMPHREY and myself.

This amendment has two purposes. The first is to accelerate the purchase of needed strategic and critical materials for the national defense stockpile. The second is to allow the managers of the stockpile to take advantage of favorable market conditions to purchase certain materials needed for the stockpile.

Madam President, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act of 1979 reaffirmed our longstanding national policy that a stockpile of strategic and critical materials should be maintained to decrease our dependence on foreign sources of supply in times of emergency. This act requires that the stockpile inventory be sufficient to cover our needs for not less than 3 years in a national emergency.

Over the past several years, the Preparedness Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, of which Senator HUMPHREY chairs and which I am ranking member, has held a number of oversight hearings on the status of our national defense stockpile. I can report to my colleagues that the inventory of many strategic critical materials in the stockpile is a long way from where it should be.

In today's prices, the total value of material needed in the stockpile is $16.7 billion. The stockpile contains $6.9 billion of the needed materials, leaving a shortfall of $9.8 billion—almost 60 percent—of materials needed to bring inventory levels of materials in the stockpile to the goals established by the various national security agencies within the executive branch.

Let me just illustrate the current inventory shortages of stockpile materials with a few examples. Today the stockpile contains:

Only 54 percent of the inventory goal for cobalt.

Only 3 percent of the inventory goal for copper.

Only 16 percent of the inventory goal for nickel.

Only 52 percent of the inventory goal for columbium.

Only 17 percent of the inventory goal for titanium.

Only 31 percent of the inventory goal for tantalum.

Obviously, all of these materials would be extremely critical to our defense efforts in the event of a national emergency. At the rate we are presently going, however, it will take decades to bring the inventory for these and other important materials up to the inventory goals.

The 1979 stockpile act envisioned that we would use receipts from the sale of any excess materials to purchase needed materials for the stockpile. To accomplish this goal, Congress in the act set up a separate fund in the U.S. Treasury—the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund—where all receipts received from the sale of stockpile materials are deposited. By law, funds deposited in that fund can only be used for the acquisition of needed materials from the stockpile—nothing else.

We recently passed the fiscal year 1985 omnibus defense authorization bill the Armed Services Committee recommended, and the full Senate endorsed, a provision earmarking 30 percent of the revenues from the sale of oil from the Naval Petroleum Reserve in fiscal year 1985 for the Stockpile Transaction Fund. This provision, which I believe will be adopted by the Authorization Conference Committee, will provide the necessary infusion of funds into the Stockpile Transaction Fund in fiscal year 1985—approximately $300 million—to continue a program of purchases for the stockpile.

What this amendment does is to make sure that the funds which we have already set aside in the authorization bill to build up our national defense stockpile are in fact appropriated for that purpose.

It makes no sense, those funds can be used for no other purpose, to have them sit there and be unused when we have the kind of needs that we have for our strategic stockpile.

The bill before the Senate appropriates $120 million from the Stockpile Transaction Fund for stockpile purchases in fiscal year 1985. Mr. President, if we are only willing to appropriate $120 million a year toward buying materials for the stockpile, it will take over 80 years to build the stockpile inventories to the required levels.

We have already taken a significant step toward building the stockpile this year by providing a significant amount of funds for stockpile purchases from naval petroleum reserve receipts. Once these receipts are deposited in the Stockpile Transaction Fund, they cannot be used for any purpose other than purchases of material for the stockpile. It just doesn't make sense to earmark revenues from the sale of oil from naval petroleum reserves to the Stockpile Transaction Fund and then not use the funds for the only purpose for which they can legally be used—purchasing strategic and critical materials for the stockpile.

Another consideration behind this amendment, Mr. President, is the very favorable market condition which currently exists for some of the materials needed for the stockpile. The Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA], which oversees the national defense stockpile, recently informed the Armed Services Committees that they are considering a purchase of copper for the stockpile in fiscal year 1984 because of the current very favorable market conditions for the purchase of copper and because of the large quantity of copper needed to fill stockpile requirements.

The inventory deficit for copper is one of the largest of any material in the stockpile. The inventory goal for copper is 1 million short tons; we have on hand only 29,048 short tons, less than 3 percent of the requirement.

Our domestic copper industry is experiencing very difficult times. A significant purchase of copper by the stockpile could be one important aspect of an overall Federal plan to help our domestic copper industry back along the road to recovery. This amendment does not mandate purchase of any specific material for the stockpile within the $250 million which would be appropriated. That decision is properly left up to the managers of the stockpile. However, I am pleased to report that if this amendment is adopted, the stockpile managers are ready to consider a significant purchase of copper with these funds.

Last week, I wrote Mr. Louis Giuffrida, the Director of FEMA, and asked him what additional materials would be purchased for the stockpile in fiscal year 1985 if the ceiling on obligational authority were raised from $120 million to $250 million. Mr. Giuffrida responded with a list of eight materials that would be considered for purchase for the stockpile. The largest in quantity and value of these eight materials would be copper.

The exact quantity and value of the eight materials considered by FEMA for acquisition is classified; I would be glad to share the list with any of my colleagues who are interested.

Madam President, the long-term needs of the stockpile, as well as the favorable market conditions for the purchase of some critical stockpile materials, underscore the need for this amendment to increase the appropriation for stockpile purchases in fiscal year 1985 to $250 million.

As I understand, these funds will be in the stockpile transaction fund, and cannot be used for any other purpose. It just doesn't make sense not to put the funds to use for the purpose for which they are intended—rebuilding our national defense stockpile.

Madam President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Madam President, the proposed amendment is necessitated by a change in the procurement practice for purchasing strategic and critical materials for the national defense stockpile. In the past, funding for purchases was derived from sales of materials that are considered excess to the national defense stockpile. Demand for these materials has been relatively low. Accordingly, the administration has forwarded an annual request for appropriation of $120 million for new purchases. This amount has been fairly consistent with the level of sales in past years.

In fiscal year 1985, however, projected sales will not reach $120 million. Therefore, my distinguished colleague from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, and I searched for an alternative method to fund purchases for the national defense stockpile. To achieve this goal, we offered an amendment to the Department of Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1985 requiring 30 percent of the receipts from sales of oil and other products of the naval petroleum reserve be credited to the stockpile transaction fund with the remaining 70 percent of receipts being credited to the Treasury.

Our amendment was accepted and made a part of the Department of Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1985 as passed by the Senate. As a result, this new source of funding will deposit approximately $250 to $300 million in the stockpile transaction fund during fiscal year 1985. In light of this fact, Senator LEVIN and I are offering this amendment to raise the appropriation for purchases for the national defense stockpile from $120 million to $250 million for fiscal year 1985. Although this is a small first step in improving the readiness of our national defense stockpile, it is at least the first step. Madam President, I urge that all of my colleagues support the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, Senator LEVIN and myself.●

Mr. DECONCINI. Madam President, I am a cosponsor of the amendment being offered by my friend from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, which will increase the appropriation for purchases for the national defense stockpile from the $120 million contained in the Treasury bill to $250 million. This amendment will have no effect on the budget authority totals contained in this Treasury funding measure but will allow materials, critical to the strategic security of our Nation to be purchased for the defense stockpile. By increasing the transaction fund to $250 million, GSA will be in a position to purchase many second and third tier strategic commodities at a time when first tier commodities are prohibitively expensive. It will also allow the fusion of needed cash into the fund.

It is my understanding that a portion of these new funds will be utilized by GSA to acquire copper, which is presently a third tier priority. Our current copper stockpile is dangerously low. The Federal Emergency Management Agency is required to maintain 1 million tons of copper in the national defense stockpile. Presently, the stockpile only contains 30,000 tons of this critical material, which is 3 percent of the amount necessary to protect our Nation's security.

The dramatic plight of the domestic copper industry is well-known to this body. It is suffering because of the large quantities that are being imported into this country by foreign countries. The purchase of copper for the stockpile at this time will give us the perfect opportunity to strengthen our national defense readiness while at the same time, giving a needed jolt to our domestic industry which is at one of it's lowest ebbs in history. Today's price for copper is 65 cents per pound. This is a bargain for the Federal Government and there is truly no better time than now to purchase this strategic material.

It is my hope that my colleagues can and will support this Amendment. It is important to the future security of our Nation.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Madam President, will the Senator from Michigan yield for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I ask if the amendment of the Senator from Michigan makes any provision for the purchase of strategic metals for the stockpile, specifically from American mines, to the maximum extent possible, and if there is a requirement for that in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. I respond to my friend that there is no specific provision in the amendment to do this. Of course, it would be our hope that the stockpile managers would achieve that.

Mr. BINGAMAN. If the Senator will yield further, I am concerned that we may in fact by virtue of this amendment and the underlying provision of the law be buying some metals which are mined in this country, but instead of buying from domestic sources we would be filling our stockpile from production overseas; therefore, at this point I wish to offer a perfecting amendment if I could to the Senator's amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 3393

Purpose: To ensure the purchase of copper be from domestic sources

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] for himself and Mr. DECONCINI proposes an amendment numbered 3393 to amendment numbered 3392.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

An amendment to the Levin amendment, at the end of the language proposed to be added, strike the period after "acquisition" and insert in lieu thereof a colon, and add the following:

"Provided, That none of the funds appropriated by this paragraph may be used to purchase any copper for the National Defense Stockpile that is not mined and smelted in the United States."

Mr. BINGAMAN. My concern is that I understand from the discussions we have had with the Federal Emergency Management Agency regarding this possible amendment that a good deal of the additional funds being provided here would go to the purchase of copper.

According to the FEMA Director he has indicated in a letter to us that copper would be the single largest metal purchase being made out of these additional funds.

At this point, Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the letter of the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY,
Washington, DC, July 20, 1984.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,
Subcommittee on Preparedness, Committee on Armed Services, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. LEVIN: This is in response to your letter of July 19, 1984, concerning possible additional purchases in Fiscal Year 1985 for the National Defense Stockpile.

On February 2, 1984, I transmitted the Annual Materials Plan (AMP) for Fiscal Year 1985 to the Committees on Armed Services. That AMP proposed the acquisition of 14 materials with an estimated value of $120 million. If $250 million of obligational authority were available in Fiscal Year 1985, the enclosed list of additional acquisitions would be considered in a revision of the AMP for Fiscal Year 1985. This list includes eight materials valued at $130 million, the largest value of which would be copper. The amounts of five materials on the present plan could be increased while three new materials could be added.

If you should need further assistance, please have a member of your staff contact my Office of Congressional Relations at 287-0400.

Sincerely,

LOUIS O. GIUFFRIDA,
Director.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Madam President, the U.S. copper industry's operating loss in 1983 was more than $318 million. About 38 percent of its 1979 work force is now unemployed. Copper production in my State dropped from 164,235 to 67,693 metric tons between 1979 and 1982. Total dollar value of production in the State during those years fell from $337 million to $97 million. Employment plummeted by 37 percent, from 3,503 employees to 2,248—1,255 jobs.

It is not difficult from these figures, Madam President, to see the hardship that it has caused our domestic copper industry. The situation naturally prompted the domestic copper producers to petition the International Trade Commission for relief under section 101 of the Trade Act of 1974 alleging that foreign copper imports are causing serious injury, and on June 14 the five commissioners unanimously agreed that the U.S. copper industry had indeed suffered substantial injury from foreign imports.

On June 27 they recommended trade relief, and two commissioners supported import quotas, two favored tariffs, and one was undecided.

Madam President, the amendment I have offered very simply states that none of the funds appropriated for the national defense stockpile may be used to purchase copper that is not mined and smelted in the United States. It is a simple amendment. It makes a great deal of sense, in my opinion. At this time, when the U.S. copper market is in serious trouble mainly due to the unfair subsidization by foreign governments, it is only just that we require any additional purchase of copper for the national defense stockpile to be copper that is mined and smelted in the United States.

Madam President, I urge the adoption of this perfecting amendment.

Mr. LEVIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ARMSTRONG). The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator's amendment would establish a good principle in this amendment and I would be happy to accept that as a perfecting amendment. It was, of course, hoped that the managers of the stockpile would make those purchases in America but there is no guarantee. But I would be happy to accept this perfecting amendment. I understand the managers of the bill would still find my amendment, as perfected, acceptable. I would also state that Senator HUMPHREY, as my principal cosponsors, accepts the perfecting amendment of Senator BINGAMAN.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, before any action is taken on the amendment, that Senator DECONCINI be added as a cosponsor of this amendment. I appreciate his support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I support the "Buy America" amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to require the Federal Emergency Management Agency to acquire materials for the defense stockpiles from domestic producers. This amendment is a vital and appropriate response to both our national security needs and the viability of domestic industries' survival and strength.

Mr. President, the current economic depression of this Nation's copper industry is a dramatic and lasting concern to our Nation's economic and defense needs. The domestic copper industry's plight, with production running at one-half of capacity, and prices at their lowest levels since the Great Depression, is grave enough to require immediate relief to keep its very existence in the market. Foreign imports are the overriding reason for our country's depressed copper industry. Our copper mines cannot compete against foreign copper mines which are backed by their own governments as well as by a number of international lending institutions. These foreign mines continue to overproduce despite a worldwide glut of copper. Our nation's imports of copper have risen 122 percent since 1979. The domestic copper industry is more than capable of competing in a world market; however, there is no free world market for copper.

Copper is a strategic metal. The Federal Emergency Management Agency is required to stockpile 1 million tons of copper for our national defense. Yet, current copper stockpiles are only 3 percent of this 1-million-ton requirement. Efforts to improve our national defense readiness in copper have met with limited success in the past. Now, the Federal Management Agency is ready to purchase additional copper for the National Defense Stockpile. This is a perfect opportunity to strengthen our national defense, while at the same time, improving our domestic copper industry through the purchase of our country's own copper resources. The price of copper stands at its lowest price since the Great Depression. The current price of copper is 65 cents per pound. There is truly no better time than now for the Federal Government to acquire this strategic metal. Our national defense will be strengthened as will our domestic copper industry.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency is not required to purchase materials domestically even when they may be purchased domestically as economically as abroad. Mr. President, the ability of FEMA to purchase on the world-wide market is essential for the acquisition of those materials which are unavailable in this country. However, when the materials are readily available in this country, and may be obtained without sacrificing economy or quality, I think it is incumbent upon the Agency to make those purchases domestically. The gravity of the domestic copper situation, combined with the utter lack of fair trade by foreign producers, make this argument to "Buy America" all the more forceful. For these reasons, I support Senator Bingaman's amendment and urge its adoption.

This is strategically important. Not only does it deal with strategic stockpiles, the underlying amendment of the Senator from Michigan, which I also wish to be added as a cosponsor, is vital to the strategic defense of the United States.

The stockpile, it goes without saying, is deficient in numerous strategic metals. Just one of those happens to be copper, where only 30,000 tons are in the stockpile. The goal of that Strategic Stockpile Act was more than 1 million tons. So we have a real shortage. It is a heck of a buy today at around 60 cents a pound and it is an opportunity to strengthen our national security.

So I compliment my two colleagues. From the minority side of the aisle, we are prepared to accept both of these amendments.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, on this side of the aisle, we are ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, before the amendment is accepted, I ask unanimous consent to add Senator DOMENICI, of New Mexico, and Senator ARMSTRONG, of Colorado, as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BINGAMAN. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It has been my privilege and responsibility to sponsor and cosponsor amendments of the type that is offered today by the able Senators from Michigan and New Mexico and all of those who have been speaking for the RECORD. I hope that I might be included in this effort.

I think it is very worthwhile, very necessary for us to speak again and again for American productivity and let the people of the world know that we are cooperative but we have a responsibility here at home to the workers of this country in the production of our products that are consumed by the public.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, we are honored to have the Senator from West Virginia as a cosponsor of this amendment, as well, and I ask unanimous consent that he be added as a cosponsor. I also ask unanimous consent that I be added as a cosponsor of Senator LEVIN's underlying amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from West Virginia will be added as a cosponsor of the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from New Mexico will be added as a cosponsor of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be added as a cosponsor of Senator BINGAMAN's perfecting amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN].

The amendment [No. 3393] was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3392

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment, as amended, of the Senator from Michigan. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as amended, of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment (No. 3392) was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BAUCUS be added as a cosponsor to the Levin-Bingaman amendment that was just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank the managers of the bill for the work and help they have put into this amendment. I greatly appreciate it.

AMENDMENT NO. 3394

(Purpose: To prohibit the expenditure of funds made available to the Postal Service by the Act to charge child support enforcement officers, employees, or participants fees for information requested or provided concerning postal customers' addresses)

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] proposed an amendment numbered 3394.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 17, line 7, insert after "level" the following: "Provided further, That none of the funds made available to the Postal Service by this Act shall be used to implement any rule, regulation, or policy of charging any officer or employee of any State or local child support enforcement agency, or any individual participating in a State or local program of child support enforcement, a fee for information requested or provided concerning an address of a postal customer".

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, in May the Postal Service issued new regulations that required most Government agencies to pay for their address verification services. Previously Government organizations were allowed to tap these postal functions free of charge. The Postal Service, however, has seen fit to make several significant exemptions to this new regulation. For one, they have chosen to exempt law enforcement agencies. However, public organizations such as child support enforcement agencies does not enjoy such favor.

I feel that these agencies who are charged with collecting the child support and enforcing the laws that we pass here in the Senate and that have been ordered by the courts, are indeed a part of the law enforcement structure. And, in the instance of child support enforcement, I do not believe that this additional bureaucratic nightmare should be added upon the agencies that do the business of collecting child support from the parents who should be paying it but, in many cases, are just fleeing from State to State. Therefore, child support agencies are very dependent upon the new addresses from the Postal Service.

Consequently, I am proposing an amendment that will include child support enforcement agencies in the exemption category. It is my firm belief that this is the only equitable way to deal with this important problem.

I have discussed this matter with the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Senator ABDNOR] and the ranking minority member of the Senator Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service appropriations, Senator DECONCINI. It is my understanding they share my concern over this important issue. I yield to my distinguished colleague from South Dakota for any comments he might have.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is correct. We highly endorse this amendment and urge its passage.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, likewise the minority is prepared to accept the amendment. I compliment the Senator from Florida for bringing it to our attention and, as usual, doing the excellent job she does in representing the many, many constituents in this area that are forgotten about.

I am glad to yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the Senator.

I wish to inquire of the able Senator from Florida, I was listening carefully but it was difficult for me to understand fully where the Postal Service is involved in what I am sure is a meritorious amendment.

Mrs. HAWKINS. The Postal Service issued regulations last May that would charge $1 for each time they are requested to give a change of address to any agency in Government. They exempted law enforcement agencies but they did not exempt child support enforcement agencies. The child support enforcement agencies are using the service much more often than any other Government agencies due to the frequent evasions of a parent who is responsible for paying the support. It would be an added bureaucratic nightmare to just set up the network that we would need in each State to comply with the postal regulations.

My amendment simply asks that the child support enforcement agencies be exempt, along with law enforcement agencies, from having to pay for this service

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I am appreciative of the further explanation which I am sure was made in the first instance. But I did not have the opportunity to listen to it as I have now. I again commend the constructive career in the Senate of the lady from Florida.

I would like, if agreeable, to join others as a cosponsor of the amendment as it is finally to be voted on.

Mrs. HAWKINS. I thank my friend, the distinguished Senator, and I thank the managers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator will be added as a cosponsor.

Is there further debate on the amendment? Is there objection to the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS].

The amendment (No. 3394) was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CIVILIAN WELLNESS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, more than $200 billion is spent annually on health-care costs in this Nation while only 2 percent of that amount is spent on keeping our citizens healthy. Perhaps the most significant long-term solution to reduce health-care costs is to concentrate our efforts on wellness, the promotion of health, and the prevention of disease.

What we now face in this country is a crisis in health-care expenditure. If we do not attempt to control these escalating figures the insolvency of the Medicaid program is almost a certainty and the Government's ability to provide adequate health care to its citizens a bygone conclusion.

But all is not lost if we act now and act quickly. The Federal Government, as the major contributor to payment of health-care costs, can also be the major beneficiary if it incorporates wellness principles into the Federal workplace.

The private sector has demonstrated repeatedly the success of such programs. Whether it be under the guise of wellness, health enhancement, or fitness the Federal Government ought to be incorporating such programs into the work environment. Particularly, since the Federal Government presently employs over 2.9 million civilian workers and is the largest single employer in the Nation. Yet, it is engaged in limited health-promotion activities for its workers.

The benefits are obvious. Wellness programs are justified on the basis of an increase in job satisfaction, improvement of the workplace, greater productivity, improved employee morale, and reduced employee absenteeism.

Mr. President, in this respect I am persuaded that the Federal Government is no different than corporate America which is reknowned for getting the maximum use of its investment dollar and has been in the forefront of establishing wellness programs. I therefore strongly believe it would be prudent management by the largest employer, the Federal Government, to invest in its workers and to improve the Federal work environment as a means for greater quality and delivery of service and improved productivity.

Therefore, I plan to ask the U.S. Office of Personnel management in consultation with the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to convene a blue ribbon panel of public health experts and management specialists to assess the present level of health-promotion activity in the Federal civilian sector and to make recommendations on how current wellness programs of Federal workers can be expanded and improved. Recently, I called upon the Secretary of Defense to convene a similar panel for the benefit of military personnel and their dependents.

Mr. DECONCINI. I applaud the effort of my colleague and good friend, the Senator from New Mexico. I also support calling upon OPM to convene in consultation with HHS a blue ribbon panel to assess the level of activity on the subject of wellness and to make recommendations on how current wellness programs can be expanded and improved.

Mr. ABDNOR. I, too, would like to join with my two colleagues, the Senator from New Mexico and the distinguished ranking Democrat of the Treasury, Postal, General Government, Appropriations Subcommittee in support of further attention for wellness for Federal civilians. The Federal Government as the country's largest employer properly should be concerned with evaluation of its wellness program with an eye toward necessary improvement, as a useful tool for improved morale and productivity.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank my colleagues for their words of encouragement and interest. I invite my colleagues to join with me in writing to OPM on this subject.

Mr. DECONCINI. I would be pleased to join such an effort.

Mr. ABDNOR. I would also be pleased to join with my good friend.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank my colleagues for their generous support.

Mr. GORTON. As the Senator knows, the operations of the Customs Service are a matter of particular importance to Washington State. At this time the Service is considering the creation of a new customs district along the Columbia and Snake Rivers. While I support that proposal, it is important that we recognize that the creation of such a district would not materially affect the workload of the Seattle customs district. With significant growth of trade and travel through the Seattle ports, any diminution of Customs Service resources in the Seattle district would be disastrous. Would the chairman agree that the creation of a new customs district along the Columbia and Snake Rivers should not be used to justify any reduction in staffing levels at the Seattle customs district?

Mr. ABDNOR. I would agree with the Senator from Washington. I know that Customs Service staffing in the Seattle district is already at a barebones minimum. I agree that the creation of a new customs district in the Pacific Northwest, or boundary changes in existing districts, should not be used as a pretext for reducing the Customs Service staffing levels in the Seattle customs district.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STEVENS. For the record, I believe it advisable to discuss the importance of this appropriations bill on the only remaining taxpayer subsidy to the U.S. Postal Service—revenue forgone. Revenue forgone is the category which subsidizes nonprofit organizations' mailings.

It is my understanding that the committee bill contains $801 million for revenue forgone and that this amount is sufficient to freeze nonprofit and other preferred mail rates at the current step 14 level. However, what should be clear is whether this $801 million will be sufficient once the pending postal rate case is completed and the resulting rate schedule is implemented.

Mr. ABDNOR. My understanding is that pursuant to existing law, preferred rates will move up with the new step 14 and remain there until the end of fiscal 1985.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, have you heard as to the exact date the new rate schedule will take effect?

Mr. ABDNOR. No; the Board of Governors of the U.S. Postal Service did indicate that they do not intend to implement the new rate schedule until January or March 1985.

Mr. STEVENS. And we cannot anticipate now what the new rate schedule will be for preferred rate mailers, is that correct?

Mr. ABDNOR. Yes; there are too many unknowns. The final outcome of the postal rate case could be rates that are higher or lower than the Postal Service's initial request.

Mr. STEVENS. If that is the case, I foresee a potentially serious problem for colleges, universities, charities, churches, and other religious organizations, publishers of nonprofit periodicals, classroom publishers, and libraries. They are legitimately concerned about being caught on a roller coaster ride.

Mr. ABDNOR. I do not think this is a concern. Congress is appropriating $801 million, the amount in the committee bill, with the understanding that it will be sufficient to stabilize preferred rates at step 14.

Mr. STEVENS. To summarize, the Congress will appropriate sufficient funds to stabilize preferred rates at step 14 at the beginning of fiscal 1985. Then, should a change in the rate schedule come about, preferred rates would move up only to the new step 14 until the appropriations run out, which will be September 30, 1985.

Mr. ABDNOR. That is my understanding. The committee will deal with the level of rates after that time when we consider the appropriations for fiscal 1986.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator from South Dakota for his explanation and understanding.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HANDICAPPED CHILDREN'S PROTECTION ACT

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr President, in 1975, Congress enacted the Education for all Handicapped Children Act, Public Law 94-142, and indicated in the statement of findings that it is in the national interest that the Federal Government assist State and local efforts to provide programs to meet the educational needs of handicapped children in order to assure equal protection under the law. The act established an enforceable substantial right to a free appropriate public education for all handicapped children, and established procedures to protect those rights that includes ongoing parental involvement and due process including a right to judicial review.

In 1984, over 4.5 million handicapped children received special education and related services designed to meet their individual needs supported under Public Law 94-142. Parents, professional educators, school administrators, and officials at the local, State, and Federal level have agreed that the impact of Public Law 94-142 has been overwhelmingly positive. Handicapped children across the country are being provided the opportunity to learn, to become more independent, and to develop to their full potential.

On July 5, 1984, the Supreme Court, in Smith against Robinson, places the protection and enforcement of the educational rights of handicapped children in serious jeopardy. In a 6 to 3 decision, the Court determined that Public Law 94-142 does not allow the award of attorneys' fees to parents who after exhausting administrative procedures have filed a civil suit to protect their child's right to a free appropriate public education. This is because Public Law 94-142 does not specifically authorize attorneys' fees. The Court concluded that Public Law 94-142 limited the availability of certain remedies including attorneys' fees afforded under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and section 1983 of the Civil Rights Act. The Court for the first time has raised serious questions about the relationship between Public Law 94-142 to section 504 protections that have generally been accepted as available to handicapped children.

The Court's rationale was that the comprehensiveness and detail with which EHA addresses the provision of schooling to handicapped children implies that Congress intended to generally limit remedies to those explicitly provided in Public Law 94-142. The Court argued that plaintives could not circumvent or enlarge Public Law 94-142 remedies by resorting to other statutes, in this case by providing for attorneys' fees.

Unfortunately, the Court has not only misinterpreted the congressional intent underlying the EHA, but it has also frustrated Congress' intent in enacting sections 504 and 1983 which I and many Members of this body assumed protected the civil rights claims of handicapped children.

The legislative record—including the 1978 floor debate on the Rehabilitation Act Amendments—and a decade of unbroken executive branch interpretation—as documented in the testimony and legal positions taken by the Nixon, Ford, Carter, and Reagan administrations—reflect a consistent assumption that Public Law 94-142 and section 504 were intended to be free standing, complimentary—but not identical—legislative acts. The Court expressly does not decide the situation where EHA is not available or where section 504 guarantees substantive rights greater than those available under the EHA. Both decisions are completely silent on the continued responsibility and authority of the Department of Education to continue to enforce the current section 504 regulations.

Congress has authorized attorneys' fees in virtually all civil rights actions brought under Federal law. Even when a statute does not specifically authorize fee awards, recovery is still possible by asserting a claim under section 1983—14th amendment of the Constitution—which authorizes actions for deprivations by a State official of any Federal constitutional or statutory right. When Congress passed the Civil Rights Attorneys' Fees Awards Act of 1976 [CRAFAA] to authorize fee awards in actions brought under section 1983, the intent was to close gaps in our civil rights laws whereby awards of fees were not explicitly available. It is clear to this Senator that it was not the intent of Congress to leave the constitutional claims of handicapped children seeking a free appropriate public education unprotected.

Similarly, when Congress approved section 505(b) of the Rehabilitation Act and addressed the need for attorneys' fees, referring to the rights section 504 extended to handicapped individuals, there was no exception made for handicapped children seeking an education. The 1978 Senate and House reports accompanying section 505(b) explain that disabled individuals were one of the very few, if only, minority groups in this country who had not been specifically authorized by Congress to seek attorneys' fees. The purpose of this provision was to correct this omission and thereby assist handicapped individuals in securing the legal protection guaranteed them under title V of the Rehabilitation Act. It certainly was not the intent of Congress to exclude from the coverage of section 505(b) the claims of handicapped children seeking a free appropriate public education.

The Supreme Court's decision in Smith against Robinson creates a series of important legal and administrative problems, including:

First, parents of handicapped children are denied direct access to the district courts to enforce rights under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act even where immediate injunctive relief—not available under Public Law 94-142, may be critical—that is, suspension; expulsion—or where a case has been bogged down in administrative proceedings for years.

Second, the economic resources of parents become crucial to the protection of their children's rights regardless of the merits of the claim.

Third, the standard for determining Public Law 94-142 preemption is unworkable and is likely to create an enormous number of disputed court cases. For example, the section 504 regulations defines several crucial terms—that is, appropriate education—more broadly than does Public Law 94-142. Therefore, a great number of legal disputes about which statute creates the greater substantive right are also likely.

Fourth, the ability of the Department of Education to enforce subpart D of its current section 504 regulation is placed in serious question at the same time the incentive of poorer parents to invoke free assistance from the Office for Civil Rights is greatly increased.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today is a specific response to the Court's opinion in Smith against Robinson. My amendments to Public Law 94-142 are for the limited purpose of clarifying what I believe to be and has always been the intent of Congress; that attorneys' fees be available to parents, guardians, or other representatives of handicapped children who prevail in an action to enforce their child's right to education.

The proposed amendment is not in any way unique. At present, there are at least 90 separate attorneys' fees provisions to promote enforcement of over 90 different Federal laws. The amendment carefully follows the language of sections 505(b) and 1983. This amendment should correct any doubts the Court may have had and make clear Congress' intent to afford full protection for the educational rights of handicapped children.

My second amendment makes clear that Congress with the passage of Public Law 94-142 did not intend to limit or reduce the rights, procedures, and remedies available to handicapped children under the U.S. Constitution, title V of the Rehabilitation Act, and other Federal statutes. Despite the conjecture of the Court, I do not believe that in enacting Public Law 94-142 it was ever the intention of Congress to exclude from the broad coverage of the Constitution and our civil rights statutes, the claims of handicapped children seeking education.

Justices Brennan, Marshall, and Stevens in their dissenting opinion stated:

> Congress will now have to take the time to revisit the matter. And until it does, the handicapped children of this country whose difficulties are compounded by discrimination and by other deprivations of constitutional rights will have to pay the costs. It is at best ironic that the court has managed to impose this burden on handicapped children in the course of interpreting a statute wholly intended to promote the educational rights of those children.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation which simply clarifies the intent of Congress to protect the educational rights of handicapped children.

Mr. President, I submit the text of the bill for the RECORD.

S.J. Res. 334. Joint resolution to provide for the designation of the month of November 1984, as "National Hospice Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL HOSPICE MONTH

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas is pleased to be joined by Senators DURENBERGER, BENTSEN, STAFFORD, PACKWOOD, WILSON, RIEGLE, INOUYE, NUNN, GRASSLEY, CHILES, LUGAR, GORTON, HEFLIN, HEINZ, MATTINGLY, ROTH, CRANSTON, JEPSEN, THURMOND, GLENN, and DIXON in introducing a joint resolution designating November 1984 as "National Hospice Month." While this is the first resolution to designate a specific month during which we recognize hospice care as a humane response to the needs of the terminally ill, congressional support for the hospice concept goes back some years. The culmination of that support was, of course, the inclusion of the hospice benefit in Medicare.

THE HOSPICE CONCEPT

Hospice is a concept of caring for the terminally ill and their families. Its purpose is to provide compassionate care enabling the patient to live comfortably and with personal dignity while also addressing the needs of individual family members. The critical component of hospice care is the delivery of services by an interdisciplinary team of physicians, registered nurses, social workers, therapists, clergy, and specially trained volunteers. It is most often carried out in the patient's own home so that he or she can remain in familiar surroundings among those people and things most meaningful to the patient. Inpatient care is also available should it be necessary for symptom management or respite care.

THE PAST

The January 22, 1978 issue of the Washington Post contained a front page story in the Outlook section entitled "The Death of a Daughter." The story, written by Victor and Rosemary Zorza, described the treatment provided by an English hospice to their 25-year-old daughter who was dying of cancer. The story provided a moving portrayal of a family confronted with a catastrophic event made worse by a health care delivery system unprepared or unwilling to deal with a dying patient. Their decision to try a hospice, and the positive experience resulting from that choice, proved to be of tremendous interest to certain Members of the Senate at that time. Subsequent articles by the Zorzas in February and March of that same year urged U.S. acceptance of the hospice concept. Clearly these articles were not the first time hospice had been mentioned, but they caught the attention of three Senators in particular, myself, Senator Ribicoff and Senator KENNEDY.

What followed were letters to the Comptroller General of the United States and to Arthur Upton, the then Director of the National Cancer Institute, requesting information on existing hospices, the kinds of care they were providing, their staffing, patient demographics and other details that might help us sort out what should be done. There was in all seriousness a real concern about destroying or seriously inhibiting the natural growth of the hospice movement by an inflow of Federal dollars at too early a time. In October of that same year, the first annual meeting of the National Hospice Organization was held. More than 1,000 attended.

Since 1978 a great many things have taken place. The hospice movement has grown by leaps and bounds—and public support has grown. By December 1981 the time had come to begin in earnest our discussions on how best to finance hospice services. However, concerns about heavyhanded Government involvement continued. So caution was again urged. S. 1958 was introduced in the Senate on December 15, 1981. It followed the introduction of H.R. 5180 in the House.

Finally in September of 1982, the President signed into law Public Law 97-248, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, which provided for the inclusion of hospice benefits under medicare.

The hospice movement has offered outstanding support to the dying patient. The extraordinary contributions of this complete support, which includes medical, spiritual, psychological, and social assistance for the patient are well known. Nevertheless, the potential for abuse of the system does exist. Early hospices had the good fortune to be developed and administered by persons of high dedication, competence, compassion, and integrity. There are a great many people today who meet this definition, but there are also likely to be those who do not. what is contained in the so-called TEFRA legislation, as finally agreed to, reflects such a concern. The hospice program is too important to allow its integrity to be jeopardized by a blind acclaim of its objective that precludes appraisal of problem areas. clearly it is in all our best interests to continue to support this system of care while improving upon the law as currently designed.

THE PRESENT

Some 1,200 programs utilizing thousands of professionals and trained volunteers are dedicated to promoting the hospice concept—meeting the physical, emotional, and social needs of terminally ill patients and their families. Through an individualized plan of care, the patient and family can play an active role in determining how to prepare for death in a way that will be most satisfactory to them. The enactment of the hospice medicare benefit last year has made hospice care a viable alternative for many more elderly Americans. In addition, more and more private insurance plans are beginning to recognize hospice providers as full partners in the health care system and are expanding their benefit packages to include coverage of hospice services.

The hospice concept of care has proven to be a humanitarian way for patients and families to cope with the immeasurable stress and emotion of terminal illness. While the understanding and support for this concept has grown dramatically in the last few years, there is a need to continue to educate the public about the benefits of hospice and to encourage further development in this area. It is also important to recognize the significant contributions made by those who have devoted their time and resources in advancing hospice care in this country. With this in mind, I propose adoption of a joint resolution designating November 1984 as "National Hospice Month," during which appropriate programs and activities in recognition of the hospice concept of care will be conducted.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the resolution be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 334

Whereas hospice care has been demonstrated to be a humanitarian way for terminally ill patients to approach the end of their lives in relative comfort with appropriate, competent, and compassionate care in an environment of personal individuality and dignity;

Whereas hospice advocates care of the patient and family by attending to their physical, emotional, and spiritual needs and specifically, the pain and grief they experience;

Whereas hospice care is provided by an interdisciplinary team of physicians, nurses, social workers, pharmacists, psychological and spiritual counselors, and other community volunteers trained in the hospice concept of care;

Whereas hospice care is rapidly becoming a full partner in the Nation's health care system;

Whereas the recent enactment of the medicare hospice benefit makes it possible for many more elderly Americans to have the opportunity to elect to receive hospice care; and

Whereas there remains a great need to increase public awareness of the benefits of hospice care: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of November, 1984, is designated as "National Hospice Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all Government agencies, the medical community, appropriate private organizations, and the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate forums, programs, and activities designed to encourage national recognition of and support for hospice care as a humane response to the needs of the terminally ill and as a viable component of the health care system in this country.●

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am proud to join my colleagues in support of a resolution designating November 1984 as "National Hospice Month." The realities of a terminal illness are painful for every patient, family member, and friend. Hospice has brought a supportive and caring option to these individuals. Our passage of this resolution will illustrate our respect for the professionals and volunteers who have made hospice possible. It will highlight our continued interest in its development.

Though the genesis of hospice can be traced to medieval Europe where weary pilgrims, the poor, and the elderly were provided care, hospice as we identify it today is a budding concept, barely a decade old. As we have become more willing to address the issue of death, we have also become more sensitive to the needs of those who are dying. Hospice has evolved into a special kind of care, one that addresses the emotional and social distress of the patient as well as her or his medical needs. It allows a flexibility in treatment, which includes care at home or in the homelike environment of a hospice unit or facility. And it provides the support of an array of health professionals, counselors, and volunteers who are prepared to respond to the diverse needs of the terminally ill patient, from a complicated medical procedure to a simple embrace.

In 1982, Congress established a limited hospice program under medicare. While the full intent of our law has been eroded by the administration of this program, the hospice concept continues to grow. There are currently 36 hospice providers in my own State of Ohio, with an additional 13 programs now under development. Last year some 3,500 families in my State received care from these hospice providers. The Ohio Hospice Organization, along with its member programs, continues to monitor the quality of their services. They are now pressing for State licensure to insure that programs that do not apply for Medicare status will still meet full professional standards.

The hospice movement is a collective of devoted individuals who deserve our attention and recognition. I encourage my fellow Senators to join me in sponsoring this resolution, expressing our continued commitment to hospice care. In November, the National Hospice Organization will convene for its annual meeting. Let it be clear to those who daily serve the needs of the terminally ill that we in Congress remain staunch in our support for their purpose and their efforts.

SENATE RESOLUTION 424—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED WAIVING CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. RES. 424

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to consideration of H.R. 3729. Such waiver is necessary because H.R. 3729, as reported, authorizes the enactment of new budget authority which would first become available in Fiscal Year, 1985, and such bill was not reported out on or before May 15, 1984, as required by section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for such authorization. A continuing resolution was enacted, P.L. 88-151, at the close of the First Session of the 98th Congress to maintain funding at the 1983 level through September 30, 1984. Because of a compromise that needed to be fashioned between an amendment added by the House of Representatives and a proposal from the Administration, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary could not take responsible action prior to the deadline.

The budget waiver will allow Senate consideration for H.R. 3729 which authorizes an extension of current refugee programs through 1986, and authorizes the Attorney General to reimburse States and Counties for costs associated with the incarceration of Cuban refugees who were admitted to the United States in 1980, and are jailed in State and County prisons.

KENNEDY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3389

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. BIDEN) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5798, supra; as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment, insert the following:

(a) The Congress finds and declares—

On July 2, 1984 President Reagan appointed Anne M. Burford to be chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere;

For over a decade the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere has played an important role in shaping future environmental policy;

Past board members and chairpersons have had considerable expertise in the marine and atmosphere sciences and have maintained a non-partisan approach to environmental issues;

Anne M. Burford, as Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency abandoned the non-partisan approach to the environment shaped by Republican and Democratic Administrations for two decades;

Anne M. Burford's controversial and flawed tenure as Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency led to her resignation under fire on March 9, 1983.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that President Reagan should withdraw the appointment of Anne M. Burford to be Chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere.

CHAFEE AMENDMENT NO. 3390

(d) A portion of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be used by the Administrator of General Services to conduct a study to plan for the establishment, in the General Services Administration, of a National Archival Center for Presidential Papers, in which may be deposited all Presidential records and historical materials of former Presidents who leave office after 1989. The Administrator of General Services shall transmit such study to the Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this Act.

CHILES (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3391

Mr. CHILES (for himself, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. NUNN, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. HOLLINGS) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5798, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

That this section may be cited as the "Comprehensive Forfeiture Act of 1984".

TITLE I

SEC. 101. Section 1963 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1963. Criminal penalties

"(a) Whoever violates any provision of section 1962 of this chapter shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both, and shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of State law—

"(1) any interest the person has acquired or maintained in violation of section 1962;

"(2) any—

"(A) interest in;

"(B) security of;

"(C) claim against; or

"(D) property or contractual right of any kind affording a source of influence over;

any enterprise which the person has established, operated, controlled, conducted, or participated in the conduct of, in violation of section 1962; and

"(3) any property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds which the person obtained, directly or indirectly, from racketeering activity or unlawful debt collection in violation of section 1962.

The court, in imposing sentence on such person shall order, in addition to any other sentence imposed pursuant to this section, that the person forfeit to the United States all property described in this subsection.

"(b) Property subject to criminal forfeiture under this section includes—

"(1) real property, including things growing on, affixed to, and found in land; and

"(2) tangible and intangible personal property, including rights, privileges, interests, claims, and securities.

"(c) All right, title, and interest in property described in subsection (a) vests in the United States upon the commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section. Any such property that is subsequently transferred to a person other than the defendant may be the subject of a special verdict of forfeiture and thereafter shall be ordered forfeited to the United States, unless the transferee establishes in a hearing pursuant to subsection (m) that he is a bona fide purchaser for value of such property who at the time of purchase was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(d) If any of the property described in subsection (a)—

"(1) cannot be located;

"(2) has been transferred to, sold to, or deposited with, a third party;

"(3) has been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the court;

"(4) has been substantially diminished in value by any act or omission of the defendant; or

"(5) has been commingled with other property which cannot be divided without difficulty;

the court shall order the forfeiture of any other property of the defendant up to the value of any property described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

"(e)(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of a satisfactory performance bond, or take any other action to preserve the availability of property described in subsection (a) for forfeiture under this section—

"(A) upon the filing of an indictment or information charging a violation of section 1962 of this chapter and alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section; or

"(B) prior to the filing of such an indictment or information, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

"(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

"(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered:

Provided, however, That an order entered pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall be effective for not more than ninety days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown or unless an indictment or information described in subparagraph (A) has been filed.

"(2) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when an information or indictment has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than ten days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time, and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

"(3) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"(f) Upon conviction of a person under this section, the court shall enter a judgment of forfeiture of the property to the United States and shall also authorize the Attorney General to seize all property ordered forfeited upon such terms and conditions as the court shall deem proper. Following the entry of an order declaring the property forfeited, the court may, upon application of the United States, enter such appropriate restraining orders or injunctions, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to protect the interest of the United States in the property ordered forfeited. Any income accruing to, or derived from, an enterprise or an interest in an enterprise which has been ordered forfeited under this section may be used to offset ordinary and necessary expenses to the enterprise which are required by law, or which are necessary to protect the interests of the United States or third parties.

"(g) Following the seizure of property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General shall direct the disposition of the property by sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of any innocent persons. Any property right or interest not exercisable by, or transferable for value to, the United States shall expire and shall not revert to the defendant, nor shall the defendant or any person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant be eligible to purchase forfeited property at any sale held by the United States. Upon application of a person, other than the defendant or a person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant, the court may restrain or stay the sale or disposition of the property pending the conclusion of any appeal of the criminal case giving rise to the forfeiture, if the applicant demonstrates that proceeding with the sale or disposition of the property will result in irreparable injury, harm or loss to him. Notwithstanding 31 U.S.C. 3302(b), the proceeds of any sale or other disposition of property forfeited under this section and any moneys forfeited shall be used to pay all proper expenses for the forfeiture and the sale, including expenses of seizure, maintenance and custody of the property pending its disposition, advertising and court costs. The Attorney General shall deposit in the Treasury any amounts of such proceeds or moneys remaining after the payment of such expenses.

"(h) With respect to property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General is authorized to—

"(1) grant petitions for mitigation or remission of forfeiture, restore forfeited property to victims of a violation of this chapter, or take any other action to protect the rights of innocent persons which is in the interest of justice and which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter;

"(2) compromise claims arising under this section;

"(3) award compensation to persons providing information resulting in a forfeiture under this section;

"(4) direct the disposition by the United States of all property ordered forfeited under this section by public sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of innocent persons; and

"(5) take appropriate measures necessary to safeguard and maintain property ordered forfeited under this section pending its disposition.

"(i) The Attorney General may promulgate regulations with respect to—

"(1) making reasonable efforts to provide notice to persons who may have an interest in property ordered forfeited under this section;

"(2) granting petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture;

"(3) the restitution of property to victims of an offense petitioning for remission or mitigation of forfeiture under this chapter;

"(4) the disposition by the United States of forfeited property by public sale or other commercially feasible means;

"(5) the maintenance and safekeeping of any property forfeited under this section pending its disposition; and

"(6) the compromise of claims arising under this chapter.

Pending the promulgation of such regulations, all provisions of law relating to the disposition of property, or the proceeds from the sale thereof, or the remission or mitigation of forfeitures for violation of the customs laws, and the compromise of claims and the award of compensation to informers in respect of such forfeitures shall apply to forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under the provisions of this section, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions hereof. Such duties as are imposed upon the Customs Service or any person with respect to the disposition of property under the customs law shall be performed under this chapter by the Attorney General.

"(j) Except as provided in subsection (m), no party claiming an interest in property subject to forfeiture under this section may—

"(1) intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal case involving the forfeiture of such property under this section; or

"(2) commence an action at law or equity against the United States concerning the validity of his alleged interest in the property subsequent to the filing of an indictment or information alleging that the property is subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(k) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter orders as provided in this section without regard to the location of any property which may be subject to forfeiture under this section or which has been ordered forfeited under this section.

"(l) In order to facilitate the identification or location of property declared forfeited and to facilitate the disposition of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, after the entry of an order declaring property forfeited to the United States the court may, upon application of the United States, order that the testimony of any witness relating to the property forfeited be taken by deposition and that any designated book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material not privileged be produced at the same time and place, in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions under Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(m)(1) Following the entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the United States shall publish notice of the order and of its intent to dispose of the property for at least seven successive court days in such manner as the Attorney General may direct. The Government may also, to the extent practicable, provide direct written notice to any person known to have alleged an interest in the property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture as a substitute for published notice as to those persons so notified.

"(2) Any person, other than the defendant, asserting a legal interest in property which has been ordered forfeited to the United States pursuant to this section may, within thirty days of the final publication of notice or his receipt of notice under paragraph (1), whichever is earlier, petition the court for a hearing to adjudicate the validity of his alleged interest in the property. The hearing shall be held before the court alone, without a jury.

"(3) The petition shall be signed by the petitioner under penalty of perjury and shall set forth the nature and extent of the petitioner's right, title, or interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of the right, title, or interest in the property, any additional facts supporting the petitioner's claim, and the relief sought.

"(4) The hearing on the petition shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of justice, be held within thirty days of the filing of the petition. The court may consolidate the hearing on the petition with a hearing on any other petition filed by a person other than the defendant under this subsection.

"(5) At the hearing, the petitioner may testify and present evidence and witnesses on his own behalf, and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. The United States may present evidence and witnesses in rebuttal and in defense of its claim to the property and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. In addition to testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, the court shall consider the relevant portions of the record of the criminal case which resulted in the order of forfeiture.

"(6) If, after the hearing, the court determines that the petitioner has established by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the petitioner has a legal right, title, or interest in the property, and such right, title, or interest renders the order of forfeiture invalid in whole or in part because the right, title, or interest was vested in the petitioner rather than the defendant or was superior to any right, title, or interest of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts which gave rise to the forfeiture of the property under this section; or

"(B) the petitioner is a bona fide purchaser for value of the right, title, or interest in the property and was at the time of purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section;

"(7) Following the court's disposition of all petitions filed under this subsection, or if no such petitions are filed following the expiration of the period provided in paragraph (2) for the filing of such petitions, the United States shall have clear title to property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture and may warrant good title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee.".

TITLE II

SEC. 201. Part D of title II of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 841 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections 413 and 414:

"CRIMINAL FORFEITURES

"PROPERTY SUBJECT TO CRIMINAL FORFEITURE

"SEC. 413. (a) Any person convicted of a violation of this title or title III punishable by imprisonment for more than one year shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of State law—

"(1) any property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds the person obtained, directly or indirectly, as the result of such violation;

"(2) any of the person's property used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit, or to facilitate the commission of, such violation; and

"(3) in the case of a person convicted of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise in violation of section 408 of this title (21 U.S.C. 848), the person shall forfeit, in addition to any property described in paragraph (1) or (2), any of his interest in, claims against, and property or contractual rights affording a source of control over, the continuing criminal enterprise.

The court, in imposing sentence on such person, shall order, in addition to any other sentence imposed pursuant to this title or title III, that the person forfeit to the United States all property described in this subsection.

"MEANING OF TERM 'PROPERTY'

"(b) Property subject to criminal forfeiture under this section includes—

"(1) real property, including things growing on, affixed to, and found in land; and

"(2) tangible and intangible personal property, including rights, privileges, interests, claims, and securities.

"THIRD PARTY TRANSFERS

"(c) All right, title, and interest in property described in subsection (a) vests in the United States upon the commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section. Any such property that is subsequently transferred to a person other than the defendant may be the subject of a special verdict of forfeiture and thereafter shall be ordered forfeited to the United States, unless the transferee establishes in a hearing pursuant to subsection (o) that he is a bona fide purchaser for value of such property who at the time of purchase was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(d) If any of the property described in subsection (a)—

"(1) cannot be located;

"(2) has been transferred to, sold to, or deposited with a third party;

"(3) has been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the court;

"(4) has been substantially diminished in value by any act or omission of the defendant; or

"(5) has been commingled with other property which cannot be divided without difficulty;

the court shall order the forfeiture of any other property of the defendant up to the value of any property described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

"REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION

"(e) There is a rebuttable presumption at trial that any property of a person convicted of a felony under this title or title III is subject to forfeiture under this section if the United States establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(1) such property was acquired by such person during the period of the violation of this title or title III or within a reasonable time after such period; and

"(2) there was no likely source for such property other than the violation of this title or title III.

"PROTECTIVE ORDERS

"(f)(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of a satisfactory performance bond, or take any other action to preserve the availability of property described in subsection (a) for forfeiture under this section—

"(A) upon the filing of an indictment or information charging a violation of this title or title III for which criminal forfeiture may be ordered under this section and alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section; or

"(B) prior to the filing of such an indictment or information, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

"(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

"(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered:

Provided, however, That an order entered pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall be effective for not more than ninety days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown or unless an indictment or information described in subparagraph (A) has been filed.

"(2) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when information or an indictment has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than ten days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

"(3) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"WARRANT OF SEIZURE

"(g) The Government may request the issuance of a warrant authorizing the seizure of property subject to forfeiture under this section in the same manner as provided for a search warrant. If the court determines that there is probable cause to believe that the property to be seized would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture and that an order under subsection (f) may not be sufficient to assure the availability of the property for forfeiture, the court shall issue a warrant authorizing the seizure of such property.

"EXECUTION

"(h) Upon entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the court shall authorize the Attorney General to seize all property ordered forfeited upon such terms and conditions as the court shall deem proper. Following entry of an order declaring the property forfeited, the court may, upon application of the United States, enter such appropriate restraining orders or injunctions, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to protect the interest of the United States in the property ordered forfeited. Any income accruing to or derived from property ordered forfeited under this section may be used to offset ordinary and necessary expenses to the property which are required by law, or which are necessary to protect the interests of the United States or third parties.

"DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY

"(i) Following the seizure of property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General shall direct the disposition of the property by sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of any innocent persons. Any property right or interest not exercisable by, or transferable for value to, the United States shall expire and shall not revert to the defendant, nor shall the defendant or any person acting in concert with him or on his behalf be eligible to purchase forfeited property at any sale held by the United States. Upon application of a person, other than the defendant or a person acting in concert with him or on his behalf, the court may restrain or stay the sale or disposition of the property pending the conclusion of any appeal of the criminal case giving rise to the forfeiture, if the applicant demonstrates that proceeding with the sale or disposition of the property will result in irreparable injury, harm, or loss to him.

"AUTHORITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

"(j) With respect to property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General is authorized to—

"(1) grant petitions for mitigation or remission of forfeiture, restore forfeited property to victims of a violation of this chapter, or take any other action to protect the rights of innocent persons which is in the interest of justice and which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this section;

"(2) compromise claims arising under this section;

"(3) award compensation to persons providing information resulting in a forfeiture under this section;

"(4) direct the disposition by the United States, in accordance with the provisions of section 511(e) of this title (21 U.S.C. 881(e)), of all property ordered forfeited under this section by public sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of innocent persons; and

"(5) take appropriate measures necessary to safeguard and maintain property ordered forfeited under this section pending its disposition.

"APPLICABILITY OF CIVIL FORFEITURE PROVISIONS

"(k) Except to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of this section, the provisions of section 511(d) of this title (21 U.S.C. 881(d)) shall apply to a criminal forfeiture under this section.

"BAR ON INTERVENTION

"(l) Except as provided in subsection (o), no party claiming an interest in property subject to forfeiture under this section may—

"(1) intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal case involving the forfeiture of such property under this section; or

"(2) commence an action at law or equity against the United States concerning the validity of his alleged interest in the property subsequent to the filing of an indictment or information alleging that the property is subject to forfeiture under this section.

"JURISDICTION TO ENTER ORDERS

"(m) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter orders as provided in this section without regard to the location of any property which may be subject to forfeiture under this section or which has been ordered forfeited under this section.

"DEPOSITIONS

"(n) In order to facilitate the identification and location of property declared forfeited and to facilitate the disposition of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, after the entry of an order declaring property forfeited to the United States, the court may, upon application of the United States, order that the testimony of any witness relating to the property forfeited be taken by deposition and that any designated book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material not privileged be produced at the same time and place, in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions under Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"THIRD PARTY INTERESTS

"(o)(1) Following the entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the United States shall publish notice of the order and of its intent to dispose of the property for at least seven successive court days in such manner as the Attorney General may direct. The Government may also, to the extent practicable, provide direct written notice to any person known to have alleged an interest in the property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture as a substitute for published notice as to those persons so notified.

"(2) Any person, other than the defendant, asserting a legal interest in property which has been ordered forfeited to the United States pursuant to this section may, within thirty days of the final publication of notice or his receipt of notice under paragraph (1), whichever is earlier, petition the court for a hearing to adjudicate the validity of his alleged interest in the property. The hearing shall be held before the court alone, without a jury.

"(3) The petition shall be signed by the petitioner under penalty of perjury and shall set forth the nature and extent of the petitioner's right, title, or interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of the right, title, or interest in the property, any additional facts supporting the petitioner's claim, and the relief sought.

"(4) The hearing on the petition shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of justice, be held within thirty days of the filing of the petition. The court may consolidate the hearing on the petition with a hearing on any other petition filed by a person other than the defendant under this subsection.

"(5) At the hearing, the petitioner may testify and present evidence and witnesses on his own behalf, and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. The United States may present evidence and witnesses in rebuttal and in defense of its claim to the property and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. In addition to testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, the court shall consider the relevant portions of the record of the criminal case which resulted in the order of forfeiture.

"(6) If, after the hearing, the court determines that the petitioner has established by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the petitioner has a legal right, title, or interest in the property, and such right, title, or interest renders the order of forfeiture invalid in whole or in part because the right, title, or interest was vested in the petitioner rather than the defendant or was superior to any right, title, or interest of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts which gave rise to the forfeiture of the property under this section; or the court shall amend the order of forfeiture in accordance with its determination.

"(B) the petitioner is a bona fide purchaser for value of the right, title, or interest in the property and was at the time of purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section;

"(7) Following the court's disposition of all petitions filed under this subsection, or if no such petitions are filed following the expiration of the period provided in paragraph (2) for the filing of such petitions, the United States shall have clear title to property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture and may warrant good title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee.

"(p) The provisions of this section shall be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.

NATIONAL AVIATION HALL OF FAME

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, as statutory agent for the National Aviation Hall of Fame, it is part of my duty and my pleasure to offer for the RECORD matters of interest that are customarily made matters of public record.

I ask that this material be made a part of the RECORD.

The material follows:

NATIONAL AVIATION HALL OF FAME

Dedicated to honoring the outstanding pioneers of aviation and space, the National Aviation Hall of Fame was conceived by James W. Jacobs in 1958 to more fully recognize the achievements of the men and women of our nation contributing to the various aspects of successful flight. Through his efforts, and with the support of the Dayton Area Chamber of Commerce, he, Gregory C. Karas, John A. Lombard, Larry E. O'Neill and Gerald E. Weller formed the National Aviation Hall of Fame, a not-for-profit Ohio corporation, in October 1962. The first Enshrinement Ceremonies were held in December 1962.

In response to the wide public acceptance and support of the National Aviation Hall of Fame, a bill was introduced in Congress to form a national organization to be known as the National Aviation Hall of Fame. This bill was passed by Congress as Public Law 88-372 and signed by President Johnson on July 14, 1964.

Today, the National Aviation Hall of Fame is a public foundation and is required to file an annual report to Congress. However, it is supported essentially by tax-deductible individual and organizational membership dues and contributions.

Tonight, as the result of the generous efforts of many members throughout the world, the National Aviation Hall of Fame enshrines four more outstanding aviation pioneers. The one-hundred and one so honored represent the history of flight—and include some who dreamed of its possibilities, some who gave their lives in its cause, some who made it a practical reality, and some who have shown the way to the limitless universe.

JAMES T. STEWART,
President.

NATIONAL AVIATION HALL OF FAME 1983 ENSHRINED AVIATION PIONEERS

David Sinton Ingalls: Born in Cleveland, Ohio, his interest in aviation blossomed while attending Yale University in 1916-17. There he joined the First Yale Aviation Unit and began flight training at Huntington Beach, Long Island. Just prior to the United States' entry into World War I, he enlisted in the Naval Reserve Flying Forces and completed his flight training at West Palm Beach, Florida as Naval Aviator No. 85. Sailing for Europe in September, 1917, he received additional flight training at Gosport, England, and Turnbury, Scotland, before reporting to the Dunkirk, France, Naval Air Station in March, 1918. After additional training in France, he was temporarily assigned to British Royal Air Force Squadron 213 conducting operations against German submarine bases at Ostend, Zeebrugge, and Bruges, Belgium. In August and September, 1918, he was credited with shooting down at least four enemy airplanes and one or more balloons to become the Navy's only "Ace" in World War I. Relieved of duty with the 213th in October, 1918, he served as a ferry pilot and instructor at Eastleigh, England. For his war efforts he was awarded the American Distinguished Service Medal, the French Legion of Honor and the British Distinguished Flying Cross.

After the war, Ingalls re-entered Yale and received an AB degree in 1920. Then he enrolled in the Harvard Law School and earned his LLB degree in 1923. He joined the law firm of Squire, Sanders and Dempsey in Cleveland and practiced law there until 1929. Meanwhile, he was elected to the Ohio Legislature in 1926 and in 1928, where he co-sponsored the Aviation Code Act of Ohio, a model later adopted by many states. He also helped plan the Cleveland, Ohio, airport. In 1929, his outstanding qualifications came to the attention of President Hoover, who appointed him Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics. During the next three years he guided the rapid advancement of the Naval Aviation Test and Development Program, and was also commissioned a lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserves.

During the early years of World War II, he served as vice president and general manager of Pan American Ferries, Inc. Then in 1942 he went on active duty as Assistant Operations Officer on the Staff of the Commander of Air Forces Pacific. He then served as executive officer to the Forward Area and Air Center Commander at Guadalcanal. In 1944 he became Plans Officer with the South Pacific Forces, and later commanded the Pearl Harbor Naval Air Station. Retiring from active duty in 1945, after receiving the Legion of Merit and the Bronze Star, he transferred to the Navy's Retired List in 1959 with the rank of rear admiral.

After the war, he continued his association with Pan Am, and also became president and publisher of the Cincinnati Times-Star Newspaper from 1953 to 1955. He also continued an active interest in law and politics.

Theodore von Kármán: Born in Budapest, Hungary, he first earned a mechanical engineering degree at the Royal Joseph University. He later became an assistant professor at the Technical Institute of Budapest and received his Ph.D. at the University of Gottingen in Germany. In 1911 he discovered aeonautical vortex drag, later known as "Kármán Vortex Street". This led to his accepting the aeronautical chair at the Technische Hochschule in Aachen, Germany. During World War I he set up a department of aviation for the Austro-Hungarian Army and helped develop a tethered reconnaissance helicopter.

After the war, he returned to Aachen as director of the University's Institute of Aeronautics, and became a consultant on Junkers aircraft and also of Zepplin's dirigible, LOS ANGELES.

Fleeing growing anti-semitism in Germany in 1929, von Kármán became director of the Guggenheim Aeronautical Laboratory at the California Institute of Technology and of the Daniel Guggenheim Airship Institute in Akron, Ohio. He also became a consultant on the Navy dirigibles AKRON and MACON, as well as to Northrop on revolutionary aircraft construction and wing fairings to eliminate buffeting.

In 1935, he presented the first theories on air drag at supersonic speeds. His group also initiated the CALCIT Rocket Research Project, which led to the development of JATO rockets to assist aircraft takeoffs, and to the formation of the Aerojet Engineering Company. He also became a consultant to Northrop on flying wing and rocket-powered aircraft; to Boeing on high speed wind tunnels; to Lockheed on aircraft designs; to the Army Air Forces on supersonic aircraft; and to Army Ordnance on long-range missiles.

In 1944, General Arnold asked von Kármán to form and chair an Army Air Forces Scientific Advisory Group to develop a blueprint for air research needed in the next 50 years. The Group's reports, "Toward New Horizons", and "Science, The Key to Air Supremacy", served to guide Air Force developments throughout the next decade. The subsequent Scientific Advisory Board was instrumental in the development of the Atlas ICBM, the formation of the RAND Corporation, and the building of the supersonic X-15 rocket research plane.

Later, he helped establish and chaired the Advisory Group for Aeronautical Research and Development, to assist NATO countries develop mutual defense capabilities. Then in 1960 he was instrumental in forming the International Academy of Astronautics. In 1963 President Kennedy presented von Kármán the nation's first National Medal of Science for his lifetime of contributions, just prior to his death.

Thornton Arnold Wilson: Born in Sikeston, Missouri, and graduated by Iowa State University with a degree in aeronautical engineering, Wilson joined the Boeing Airplane Company in 1943 as a junior engineer. There he worked on the C-97 Stratofreighter and the Model 377 Stratocruiser.

After receiving a Master of Science degree from Cal Tech in 1948, he returned to Boeing, where he worked as an aerodynamicist and later as an Aerodynamics Senior Group Engineer on the B-47 Stratojet, the nation's first multijet bomber. After studying industrial management at M.I.T. on a Sloan Fellowship, he was named a Senior Group Engineer in charge of the preliminary design of supersonic bombers in 1953. His work led to the B-52 Stratofortress, which became the principal strike force bomber of the Strategic Air Command. After managing the design and construction of a new supersonic wind tunnel, he was named Assistant to Boeing's Chief Engineer in 1955. As such, he became involved in the KC-135 tanker for the Air Force, and the 707 jetliner that put Boeing back into the commercial aircraft business and opened a new era of jet travel.

A major challenge came in 1958 when Wilson was named Program Manager of the Minuteman Advance Projects Proposal Team which won the contract assignment to perform the final assembly and tests of the Minuteman ICBM. Later he was elected Vice President of Boeing's Aerospace Division and Manager of its Minuteman Ballistic Missile Branch, which aided the missile becoming operational with the Air Force in 1963.

In 1964, Wilson was named Boeing's corporate Vice President of Operations and Planning and he was involved in the introduction of the Boeing 727 trijet airliner, one of the world's most successful jetliners. Then after serving briefly as Vice President and General Manager of Boeing's Military Airplane Division, he returned to corporate headquarters again as Vice President of Operations and Planning. As such, he was involved in the Boeing 737 short-haul jetliner.

In 1966 he was promoted to Executive Vice President and named to Boeing's board of directors, as the Boeing 747 jetliner was being developed. Then in 1968 he was elected president of Boeing and in 1969 was also named Chief Executive Officer. As such he led the company through a period of severe economic recession in the early '70's, as the 747 was entering commercial service. Then in 1972 he was named Chairman of the Board. In recent years, he led Boeing's efforts that won the MX Cruise Missile Contract and introduced the new technology, fuel efficient 757 and 767 jetliners.

A. Scott Crossfield: Born in Berkeley, California, he began taking flying lessons at the age of twelve. Later he soloed at the age of fifteen. In 1940 he entered the University of Washington and later earned his private pilot license. Withdrawing from the University, he went to work for The Boeing Airplane Company. After Pearl Harbor, he enlisted in the Navy, earned his wings, and served as a flight and gunnery instructor before being assigned to Air Group 51 aboard the carrier Langley.

After the war, he earned a Bachelor and Master degree in aeronautical engineering at the University of Washington. Then he joined NACA at Edwards Air Force Base, where he completed the Experimental Flight Test Pilots School, and began test flights of the Bell X-1 and X-5, the Douglas Skystreak and Skyrocket, and the Northrop X-4. During this period, he made the first Keplerian trajectory flights to test the effects of weightlessness. In 1953, he flew the Douglas Skyrocket at twice the speed of sound, a historic flight milestone.

In 1955, Crossfield joined North American Aviation as a design specialist on the X-15 rocket research plane. As such, he helped develop flight control, display and telemetering systems, and the full pressure flying suit. After he was promoted to Chief Test Pilot, he then became the first pilot to successfully attain the speed of Mach 3 in the X-15 in 1960.

After being named Director of Systems Test of North Americans Space and Information Division, Crossfield was instrumental in the development of the Hound Dog missile. Then named Director of Test and Quality Assurance, he was also involved in the Apollo, Saturn II, and Paraglider programs.

Crossfield joined Eastern Air Lines in 1967 as Division Vice President of Flight Research and Development, and Flight Operations. As such, he developed an area navigation system test study in the Boston-New York-Washington corridor to relieve air congestion. In 1971, as Staff Vice President of Transportation Systems Development for Eastern, he was involved in developing a National Short Haul Transportation Plan, which later became the basis for FAA's current navigation plan.

In 1974, Crossfield became Senior Vice President of Hawker Siddeley Aviation, Inc. and developed specifications for its HS 146 short-haul airliner. Then in 1975 he became a technical consultant to the House of Representatives' subcommittee on Transportation, Aviation and Materials. In 1977 he became a consultant to the House Committee on Science and Technology with extensive interfacing with DOD, Air Force, Navy, NASA and FAA personnel and committees.

1. Summary of significant accounting policies: The Corporation was created by an Act of Congress, Public Law 88–372, July 14, 1964, to honor outstanding persons in the field of aviation. The Internal Revenue Service has confirmed the status of the Corporation as a tax-exempt public foundation. On December 18, 1981, the Corporation changed its name from Aviation Hall of Fame to National Aviation Hall of Fame, Inc.

Furniture, fixtures and equipment are recorded at cost when purchased or at estimated values when received as a donation. Depreciation is computed on the straight-line basis over the estimated useful lives of the assets.

Donated materials other than collections are recorded at their estimated value at the date of receipt. No amounts have been reflected in the statements for donated office space and services as no objective basis is available to measure the value of such services. Donated office space consists of an office and storage provided by the City of Dayton. Donated services consists of time donated by the Board of Trustees for the Corporation.

The Corporation offered both one-year and two-year memberships to the public through July 1983. Membership dues received for the current year are recorded as income at the time the membership period commenses. Deferred membership income, representing dues the second year of two-year memberships, is recognized as income during the second membership year. In August 1983, the Corporation discontinued offering two-year memberships.

Biographical research and Enshrinement Album Programs resources are restricted by the donor, grantor, or other outside party for operating the biographical research program, and are deemed to be earned and reported as revenues of the operating fund when the Corporation has incurred expenditures in compliance with the specific restrictions. Such amounts received but not yet earned are reported as restricted deferred amounts.

2. Collections: The Corporation has acquired by purchase or through donations, various models, books and other memorabilia relating to the field of aviation since its founding. Because the value of these items are not readily determinable and they can be considered inexhaustible items, the Corporation has not capitalized them. The value of objects acquired by gift for which the Corporation can make a reasonable estimate is reported as gifts in the statement of revenue, expenses and changes in fund balance.

3. Fund balances: The capital expenditure fund is intended to provide funds for the purchase of a facility for the Corporation. The Board has directed that all donations received from enshrinees or their families and income earned from investments applicable to capital expenditure fund be added to this fund. Additions to the fund amounted to $4,292 and $3,489 in 1983 and 1982, respectively.

In 1981, the Board of Trustees established the Founders Fund for special projects undertaken by the executive director of the Corporation. The Board authorized the transfer of these funds to the undesignated fund during 1983.

4. Management contract: The Corporation contracts with James W. Jacobs & Associates, Inc. and John C. Dussault on an annual basis to provide consultation and professional services to maintain operations, expand membership, sponsor events and any other services required by the Corporation. Management fees expense amounted to $29,000 and $26,000 in 1983 and 1982, respectively.●

ADVANCE NOTIFICATION PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that such a notification has been received.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of this advance notification at the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room SD–423.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, June 29, 1984.

Deputy Staff Director, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Southeast Asian country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Director.●

THE BULGARIAN CONNECTION

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to again bring to the Senate's attention the investigation into the May 31, 1981, attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II. A recent Wall Street Journal article sheds important light on Mehmet Ali Agca's career before he began his role in the conspiracy to kill the Pope.

This article, by David Ignatius, appeared in the July 17, 1984, edition of the Journal. It reports on the contents of a Turkish prosecutor's report, filed in Istanbul on January 16, 1984. The Turkish prosecutor, Col. Hanefi Ongul, was assigned to reinvestigate the career of Mr. Agca following the release of information gathered by the Italian investigation.

This article is important because it is based upon a translation of this prosecutor's report commissioned by the Journal. This prosecutor's report has received little, if any, notice in the West because of previous lack of an English translation.

A review of the contents of this report corroborates the conclusions the Italian investigation reached regarding Agca's history and background. Most significantly, it once and for all dispels the impression which was created in the immediate aftermath of the attempt on the Pope's life that Mehmet Ali Agca was a "* * * deranged, right-wing assassin acting on his own."

It confirms that Agca was an apolitical hired gun, whose contacts with the Turkish right-wing extremist group, the Grey Wolves, were incidental to his activities and his outlook on the world. It confirms his continuing relationship with the leadership of the Turkish Mafia, including key figures in the attempt on the life of the Pope.

The leader of the Turkish Mafia, Abuzer Ugurlu, and his confederates, Omer Mersan and Oral Celik, are identified in this report as having had previous dealings with Agca. This vital information links the Bulgarian and Turkish drug and gun smuggling network centered on the Bulgarian import-export company Kintex with the plot to kill the Pope. It adds weight and credibility to the Italian investigation.

I commend this article to the attention of my colleagues and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

TURKS CLOSER TO LINKING POPE'S ASSAILANT WITH BULGARIA

(By David Ignatius)

WASHINGTON.—A Turkish prosecutor's report provides additional evidence linking Mehmet Ali Agca, the man who shot the pope, with a Bulgarian-based ring of Turkish smugglers.

The Turkish report focuses on Mr. Agca's first known major crime, the 1979 murder of a Turkish journalist, Abdi Ipekci, rather than his 1981 attempt to kill Pope John Paul II. But it corroborates important details of an Italian investigation into Mr. Agca's "Bulgarian connection."

The Turkish prosecutor concludes that Mr. Agca acted in the 1979 killing of Mr. Ipekci as part of a conspiracy headed by a Turkish underworld boss, Abuzer Ugurlu, who operated largely out of Bulgaria. The Turkish report also alleges that Mr. Ugurlu gave "financial assistance to Mr. Agca when he was in Bulgaria."

The report's significance lies mainly in that it adds the official stamp of the Turkish military prosecutor to one element of the complex case prepared by Italians investigating the attempt on the pope's life—the link between Mr. Agca and the Turkish mafia boss, Mr. Ugurlu. The Turkish findings about Mr. Agca's early activities parallel those of the Italian investigation and those of independent researchers such as Claire Sterling and Paul Henze.

BULGARIANS NOT DISCUSSED

The Turkish report is a public legal document but it has received little attention outside Turkey. The report, translated by The Wall Street Journal, provides the clearest picture yet of Mr. Agca's beginnings as a paid assassin. It draws a picture of him as a tough, cynical man without fanatical political views who became an operative in an underworld ring drawn largely from his home area of Malatya in central Turkey.

The Agca of the Turkish report cheated on his university entrance exams, took sole responsibility for the 1979 killing and confidently stonewalled Turkish officials about the role of others in that murder when he was in prison in 1979, and received money from unknown sources in a network of bank accounts opened in his name.

The Turkish report doesn't discuss Mr. Agca's alleged links with the Bulgarian secret service or the relationship, if any, of the Kremlin to the alleged conspiracy to kill the pope. A report by Italian prosecutor Antonio Albano that is expected to be issued formally this month, charges that three Bulgarian intelligence operatives in Rome met with Mr. Agca and plotted a Bulgarian-sponsored attack on the pope.

The Turkish prosecutor's report was filed in Istanbul Jan. 16 by Col. Hanefi Ongul, a senior judge of the Martial Law Prosecutor's office, and his assistant, Tevfik Tunc Onat. The Turkish authorities in December 1982 had asked Col. Ongul to reinvestigate the 1979 Ipekci case, following Mr. Agca's confessions to Italian investigators about his links to Mr. Ugurlu and the Bulgarians.

The Turkish case against Mr. Ugurlu and other members of the alleged conspiracy to kill journalist Ipekci went to trial in March. Some of the report's allegations have been disclosed in testimony; the trial is continuing. According to the Turkish Embassy in Washington, Mr. Ugurlu is being held in a Turkish prison and is also a defendant in several other criminal cases besides the Ipekci murder.

Mr. Ugurlu has denied knowing Mr. Agca or participating in a conspiracy to kill Mr. Ipekci. But he has admitted to Turkish prosecutors that he gave money in 1980 to a man named Metin in Bulgaria; the prosecutor charges that "Metin" was Mr. Agca.

Mr. Ugurlu's role in the Agca case is important because of his links to the Bulgarians, who allegedly aided his drug and weapons-smuggling operations.

RELATIONSHIP SUMMARIZED

A summary of this relationship is provided by Paul Henze, who closely followed Turkish affairs as an official of the high-level National Security Council during the Carter administration. Mr. Henze told a House of Representatives panel this year: "Bulgaria started early to offer protection to Turkish drug smugglers. With Bulgarian help, what came to be called the Turkish mafia set up elaborate networks, lodged in part among Turkish workers in Europe, for moving opium products westward. . . . Fugitives from justice in their own country, these Turkish mafia figures were permitted to buy villas in Bulgaria and were given passports and eased through Bulgarian border and customs controls."

Mr. Henze adds in an interview: "Ugurlu has been known to be involved with the Bulgarians since the 1960s. It is inconceivable that a widely known criminal operative such as Ugurlu could have lived and worked in Bulgaria without the approval of the Bulgarian intelligence service and the rest of Bulgarian Communist Party hierarchy."

The Turkish prosecutor's report suggests that Mr. Agca was drawn into Mr. Ugurlu's network in Istanbul and was involved in petty smuggling operations. In early 1979, the report says, Mr. Ugurlu "proposed the idea of killing Abdi Ipekci," apparently to prevent the publication of stories about Mr. Ugurlu's smuggling activities.

The report quotes Turkish witnesses who say that as the time he was killed Mr. Ipekci was planning to publish an investigation of smuggling in the newspaper he edited, Milliyet.

ESCAPE FROM PRISON

The Turkish report also alleges that Mr. Ugurlu helped Mr. Agca escape from prison in Istanbul in November 1979, after Mr. Agca was arrested and charged with killing Mr. Ipekci, "by providing the money that was given as a bribe to the prison officials."

According to the report, Mr. Ugurlu also provided Mr. Agca with money when the prison fugitive arrived in Bulgaria in July 1980; the money was delivered by Omer Mersan, the report says. Mr. Mersan is believed to have been an associate of Mr. Ugurlu involved in European drug smuggling.

The Turkish report also outlines Mr. Agca's close involvement with Oral Celik, a Turk from Mr. Agca's home town of Malatya, who Italian investigators allege helped plan the attemped assassination of the pope and was present in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981, when Mr. Agca fired his gun.

Evidence gathered by the Turkish prosecutors indicates that Mr. Celik helped Mr. Agca plan the February 1979 killing of Mr. Ipekci, visited him in prison in Istanbul after he was arrested in June 1979, helped plan his escape in November 1979, took him by car to Ankara, the Turkish capital, after the escape, sent him to Nevsehir in central Turkey to obtain a false passport, and traveled with him in early 1980 to Erzurum, near the Iranian border in eastern Turkey, and helped him escape into Iran.

One of the Turkish report's interesting aspects is that it undercuts the picture of Mr. Agca, formed by investigators shortly after the attack on the pope, as an ideologically motivated member of the right-wing Turkish Gray Wolves organization. He did have extensive contact with members of the group, such as Mr. Celik. But the earlier view that he killed Mr. Ipekci in a right-wing plot against a liberal newspaper editor now appears to be wrong.

A HIRED GUN

Instead, Mr. Agca emerges in the Turkish report as a petty criminal who evolved into a hired gun. The report claims that he forged a pass to the Istanbul University entrance exams in 1978 and had someone else take the exam for him; that he was involved in petty smuggling in Istanbul; that he robbed a jewelry store in March 1979 and a warehouse the next month; and that in February 1980 he helped murder a Turk who he believed had informed Turkish police of his role in the Ipekci killing.

Adding to this picture of Mr. Agca as a paid assassin is evidence gathered by the Turkish prosecutors about his bank accounts. The Turkish report claims that prior to the killing of Mr. Ipekci, a total of 180,000 Turkish lira, at that time about $10,000, was deposited in his name in four Istanbul bank accounts. Mr. Agca claimed to Turkish investigators that he obtained the money through smuggling.

The Italian investigation of Mr. Agca continues the story from the point the Turkish report leaves off, after Mr. Agca's flight to Bulgaria. The two reports, taken together, suggest that after becoming a paid gunman for the Bulgarian-based Turkish mafia, and after threatening on his own to kill the pope in November 1979, Mr. Agca was taken up by operatives of the Bulgarian intelligence service.

Neither report sheds light on speculation that the Soviet Union may have cooperated with Bulgarian intelligence services in the papal shooting. Given the difficulty of obtaining evidence about Soviet intelligence operations, that question may never be settled. But the investigations of Mr. Agca have sharply altered the early picture of him as simply a deranged, rightwing assassin acting on his own.●

MAJOR OIL COMPANIES SHOULD STOCKPILE WINTER HEATING OIL

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, it is all to easy to forget the chill of the winter months in the heat of the summer. This time of year is precisely when we should be most concerned about filling our inventories of home heating oil. In the 1970's, the major oil companies stockpiled heating oil in summer fill programs. Over the last few years, these programs have been dropped, with the result that reserves have been precariously low at the start of the heating season, and major oil suppliers companies have raised the price of oil under tight market conditions.

Last winter, the wholesale and retail prices of home heating oil rose sharply by 20 cents per gallon in the Northeast. The effects of the increase were devastating to New Jersey residents, and many families were hardpressed or unable to pay their energy bills.

Earlier this month, I joined with 17 of my Senate colleagues in sending a letter to the chairmen of the major oil companies. We asked the companies to immediately restart their summer fill program and provide us with their plans for meeting next winter's heating needs in the Northeast without shortages or extreme price fluctuations.

The summer fill program is especially important for New Jersey, where more No. 2 oil is consumed than in any other State in the Nation. Northeastern inventories are currently 15 percent lower than they were last year at this time. Slightly over 34 milion gallons are now in reserve compared with 41 million gallons in July 1983. To understand better the implications of these numbers, New Jersey used 960 million gallons of No. 2 oil last year—30 times the amount of oil currently in reserve for the entire Northeast's heating needs next winter.

The real implications of low reserves are not measured in gallons of oil, but in the cost of price instability to New Jersey citizens. Too many of these citizens cannot afford another winter of high heating oil prices. Last year's sudden price increase cost New Jersey residents $100 million in higher heating bills. The 21 cents plus per gallon increase in New Jersey was the largest increase ever recorded in the State, even exceeding periods of supply disruption during the oil embargoes of the early 1970's.

Over 1 million households, or 45 percent of the homes in New Jersey, heat with oil. Hardest hit by high prices are fixed- and low-income citizens, who make up a significant part of this group. In a recent report, "Cold—Not by Choice" the National Consumer Law Center found that last winter energy expenditures for low-income households in New Jersey were $175 per month. This monthly rate was the eighth highest in the Nation. Elderly citizens who rely on supplementary security income are among the hardest hit by high energy costs. Energy bills during the 3 coldest winter months left these New Jersey seniors with only $36 per week, on average, for all of their other living expenses. Because this shocking figures is only an average, there were many who paid higher energy bills, leaving them with even less than $36 per week for their rent, groceries, and other bills.

It is my hope that we will receive a prompt reply to our letter from the major oil companies and that quick action to begin the summer fill program will be taken. Averting last year's shortages and price increases must be a shared responsibility of industry and all levels of Government.

I commend my colleague, Senator HEINZ, for initiating the letter to the major oil companies and ask that the text of the letter be printed in the RECORD. I also ask that a letter sent by New Jersey's Commissioner of Energy, Leonard Coleman, to the Secretary of Energy, Donald Hodel, be printed below. Commissioner Coleman supports the call to increase heating oil stocks to prevent a recurrence of last year's unacceptable price increases in New Jersey.

The material follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 3, 1984.

JAMES L. DETELSEN,
Chairman of the Board, Tenneco, Inc., Tenneco Building, Houston, TX.

DEAR MR. DETELSEN: As you know, heating oil prices in the Northeast last winter were extremely volatile, and supplies were precariously low. In fact, wholesale prices rose over 20 cents per gallon during the coldest period of the winter, forcing retail prices to rise by comparable amounts. Federal and state investigations of this price increase indicate several contributing causes, but the principles cause is clear: extraordinarily low inventory levels on hand in the region prior to the beginning of the heating season.

We are seriously concerned that the inventory situation for the coming winter will be as bad, or worses, than last year. Heating oil stocks are now at the lowest level in recent history, below even the Department of Energy's minimum operating levels. Moreover, there is no indication that industry officials are concerned with these depleted heating oil stocks, or taking any action to build stocks to levels higher than last year.

We believe one partial, non-regulatory solution to this problem is reinstitution of your summer fill program, which until recently provided the financing needed to build regional stocks in anticipation of the heating season. Without summer fill, it is not possible for your marketers or their customers to prepare adequately for a cold winter. If this program is not reinstituted, and if other preventive actions not taken, we do not see how severe price instability, and possible local shortages can be avoided.

This problem is a most serious concern, and must be addressed promptly. Planning for the needs of our millions of constituents who depends on oil heat cannot await the onset of winter. We therefore request that you immediately reinstitute your summer fill program, on terms that encourage the building of regional heating oil stocks. We also ask that you provide us with firm's plans for meeting next winter's heating needs in the Northeast without shortages or extreme price fluctuations.

Thank you for your prompt reply.

Sincerely,

Gordon Humphrey, Frank R. Lautenberg, Bill Bradley, Warren B. Rudman, Bill Cohen, John Chafee, Edward Kennedy, John Heinz, Claiborne Pell, Daniel P. Moynihan, Robert T. Stafford, Arlen Specter, George J. Mitchell, Alfonse D'Amato, Patrick J. Leahy, Chris Dodd, Paul Tsongas, Lowell P. Weicker, Jr.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY,
Newark, NJ, June 22, 1984.

Hon. DONALD P. HODEL,
U.S. Department of Energy, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY HODEL: During this past winter, New Jersey's residential heating oil customers experienced the sharpest month-to-month price increase in history. Between the middle of December and the end of January, the wholesale cost of #2 heating oil rose by 21 cents per gallon. This steep increase, coming as it did in the middle of the heating season, caused extreme economic hardships for fixed-income elderly and low-income consumers who heat their homes with oil.

The primary cause of this price increase—according to the oil companies who imposed it—was the sharp drawdown of inventories that occurred during a short spell of cold weather in late December. Although the cold weather snap was not severe enough (in fact, the heating season as a whole was near normal in terms of degree days) nor the drawdown deep enough to actually pose the threat of a fuel shortage, the level of inventories held by the major oil companies was low enough to generate a price shock in the market. This shock was felt most severely in the Northeast, since other areas of the country (including some which had much more severe winters than this area) sustained much smaller price increases.

It is painfully obvious now that better planning in the form of higher pre-season inventories would have mitigated, if not totally eliminated, last winter's dramatic price increase. If experience is truly the best teacher, one would think that the oil companies would be spending this summer busily stockpiling their heating oil inventories to prevent a recurrence of this situation next winter. I am shocked and dismayed to learn that just the opposite is true.

According to a U.S. Department of Energy report, the major oil companies had 103 million barrels of heating oil in stock as of June 8, 1984. One year ago, these companies had 113.8 million barrels on hand, while in June 1982, they held 123.7 million barrels. In other words, our heating oil reserves this year are about 10% below last year's obviously inadequate level, and about 20% below the level that existed two years ago.

The situation on the East Coast is even more alarming. As of June 8, 1984, inventories on the East Coast amounted to 34.4 million barrels. This compares to 41.1 million barrels last June and 44.2 million barrels in June 1982. Considering that the East Coast bore the brunt of last winter's price increase, I find it unconscionable that our inventory level is actually 15% below the level which created that price hike.

In a letter I wrote on June 2, 1982 to then Energy Secretary James B. Edwards, I cited the level of inventories that month as being well below the levels of previous years. I warned at that time that such low inventories posed "a potentially disastrous situation" in terms of meeting the needs of New Jersey's heating oil customers. In the two years since I wrote that letter, oil company inventories continued to fall. Despite last winter's price debacle, inventories are lower than ever. Any disruption in oil supplies resulting from the ongoing Iran-Iraq war could cause a further deterioration of this condition. It would appear that the major oil companies are lowering their inventories as the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR) is being filled. I do not believe it is the intent of either Congress or the Administration to turn the SPR into a government-financed storage facility for the major oil companies.

The economic impact on New Jersey of last winter's price increase was devastating. We estimated that residential customers alone paid over $100 million more for their heating oil than they would have ordinarily, while additional heating costs for businesses, factories, schools and hospitals amounted to millions more. Last year, New Jersey consumed over 959 million gallons of #2 oil—more than any other state in the nation. Nearly half the homes in New Jersey—over one million residential units—heat with oil. We cannot afford to be placed in the precarious position of entering yet another heating season with inadequate reserves. We are leaving ourselves vulnerable to price increases at best and supply disruptions at worst.

The U.S. Department of Energy must take the initiative to secure commitments from the industry to increase inventory levels for heating oil. Such minimum levels should be set to assure stability in both prices and supplies. The State of New Jersey, and the nation as a whole, cannot afford the social or economic consequences which can result from entering another winter with less than adequate heating oil reserves.

I look forward to your prompt response to this most urgent matter.

Sincerely,

LEONARD S. COLEMAN, Jr.,
Commissioner.●

IN SUPPORT OF A FREE TRADE AGREEMENT WITH ISRAEL

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I wish to join as a cosponsor of S. 2746, legislation recently reported by the Committee on Finance to authorize the President to negotiate a free trade area agreement with Israel. This proposal is the result of a meeting last November between President Reagan and Israeli Prime Minister Shamir.

Since enactment of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934, Congress periodically has empowered the President to negotiate and to proclaim reciprocal reductions in tariffs with U.S. trading partners. The most recent grant of such authority occurred in the Trade Act of 1974, which served as the basis of negotiated tariff reductions in the Tokyo round of multilateral trade negotiations from 1975 through 1979. The 1974 act also authorized Presidential negotiations for agreements to reduce or eliminate nontariff barriers as well, subject to subsequent approval by Congress. The Tokyo round was very successful, resulting in congressional approval of 17 nontariff barrier agreements. These tariff and nontariff measures were intended to maintain the longstanding U.S. policy of preserving and promoting economic growth through a strengthening of the international trade system.

The President's basic tariff negotiating authority contained in section 101 of the 1974 act expired on January 2, 1982. Currently, the President is without any tariff proclamation authority.

The Governments of Canada and Israel have expressed an interest in conducting preliminary negotiations to determine the feasibility of concluding traded agreements to eliminate tariffs and other trade-distorting practices affecting products traded between the two countries and the United States. Israel seeks an agreement encompassing all product sectors, while Canada seeks an agreement limited to a few sectors. Such agreements offer substantial new opportunities for U.S. exporters, who have been suffering a substantial loss in world markets recently.

S. 2746 would amend section 102 of the Trade Act of 1974, which authorizes the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements addressing nontariff barriers, to authorize the negotiation of trade agreements with only Israel and Canada to reduce or to eliminate tariffs and nontariff barriers that unduly burden or restrain the foreign trade of the United States or which adversely affect the U.S. economy. The bill would also prohibit any trade benefits to be extended to any other country by reason of the extension of any trade benefit to Israel or Canada.

The principal purposes of the bill are to provide the President with the authority he requires to negotiate agreements with these countries in good faith and the assurance that the Congress will approve or disapprove of any agreement within a reasonable period of time.

For a decade, Congress has spoken of the need to pursue seriously a bilateral trade agreement with Canada, building on the successful 1965 auto pact. In August of 1983, the Canadian Government proposed the creation of such a limited free-trade arrangement. Although no decisions on negotiations have been made, such sectors as farm machinery, certain communications services, furniture, steel, and Government procurement are of particular interest. Canada and the United States are each others largest trading partners; approximately 70 percent of Canadian trade is with the United States and approximately 20 percent of U.S. trade is with Canada. There are also substantial foreign investments held in each country by citizens of the other. The President should be able to respond affirmatively to initiatives such as that of the Government of Canada. The United States can only benefit by seeking ways to open further Canada's markets to U.S. exporters and to remove barriers to U.S. trade.

Although 90 percent of Israeli exports into this country already enter duty-free, either because of zero duty rates or because of the graduated system of preferences, the United States consistently enjoys a trade surplus with Israel, even excluding military shipments. However 40 percent of U.S. exports to Israel remain subject to tariffs in the range of 10 percent to 15 percent. A mutual elimination of any remaining tariff barriers would greatly benefit U.S. exporters, while not subjecting the U.S. economy to an expanding Israeli export market which currently accounts for approximately one-half of 1 percent of all U.S. imports. The United States is Israel's largest trading partner and that country's export market is critical to the viability of an economy so heavily burdened by enormous defense requirements.

As the U.S. trade deficit increases, we should not ignore means of increasing opportunities for U.S. exporters. In addition, S. 2746 will serve to tighten the close bonds which exist between the United States and Israel, the only stable democratic nation in the Middle East.

I urge speedy adoption of this legislation.●

HONORING NICOLAS ARDITO-BARLETTA

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I wish to offer my heartfelt congratulations to the newly elected President of Panama, Nicolas Ardito-Barletta.

President-elect Barletta was elected on May 16, 1984, in the first election after 16 years of military rule. This election represents the triumph of democracy over a system that had been tightly controlled by the military.

President-elect Barletta will be an effective leader. He is honest, capable, and well qualified to be the President of Panama. Barletta's career began as a professor of economics and as adviser to Government agencies in Panama. He then became a key economic adviser to former Panamanian President General Omar Torrijos.

As his reputation grew, he became active in a number of regional organizations involved in economic development. From 1973-78, Mr. Barletta was the Minister of Planning and Economic Policy. In 1978, Mr. Barletta left Panama to become the vice president of the World Bank in charge of Latin America and the Caribbean. He is an accomplished economist with a wide reputation in international finance. Mr. Barletta has both the past experience in government and an important understanding of both domestic and international economics to effect important change in Panama.

This experience and knowledge is essential because Panama currently is faced with many economic problems. Panama is racked with a 14 percent unemployment rate, coupled with little economic growth and a lack of adequate housing and medical care. This is a problem that most Western nations have experienced over the past 4 years. With his background in economic policy, Mr. Barletta possesses the tools to turn the economy around. Having worked in the World Bank and possessing a doctorate in economics, President-elect Barletta is one of the most qualified men to bring economic recovery to Panama.

With several unstable governments hostile to the United States thriving in Latin America today, this election is all the more encouraging. Mr. Barletta promises to move the military out of politics and to consolidate civilian democracy. His election is an important step toward democratic reforms being enacted throughout the region. President-elect Barletta's shining example hopefully will be emulated throughout Central America and will be an example to be followed by all world leaders.

Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to express my congratulations to Nicolas Ardito-Barletta. I urge my colleagues to fully support the Panamanian experiment in democracy.●

RELAY '84

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to express my support for a group of individuals taking part in a very special relay race. Relay '84 is being sponsored by the World Runners International Foundation, an international running club dedicated to focussing public attention on the tragedy of world hunger. This race will take world runners from the United Nation steps in Geneva, Switzerland, to the Olympic games in Los Angeles. Along the way, the runners will spread the message that world hunger can and must be overcome.

The runners participating in this relay are making a very visible demonstration of their concern for the problem of world hunger. Individual efforts such as these are instrumental in building public support for the fight against starvation and malnutrition. I commend the world runners for their commitment and determination and wish them a safe journey.●

THE AMERICAN STEEL INDUSTRY: MYTH VS. REALITY: VIII

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I present my eighth in a series of brief statements which will appear periodically in an effort to elevate the level of debate on the crisis in the American steel industry.

The U.S. steel industry and its problems cannot be correctly understood without understanding the world market and the factors that dictate the flow of steel within it. Natural comparative advantage—the traditional economic concept upon which the world and U.S. trade philosophy is based—have very little to do with most foreign steel exports. By reviewing the percentages of government ownership, the guiding principles for national steel industries and the policies toward imports in Japan, the European Community [EC] and the Third World, the economic realities of the world steel industry can be better understood.

In order to effectively restore competitiveness to the American steel industry, policymakers must cope with the world trade situation as it exists rather than as they would like it to operate. Therefore, I am offering some further myths and realities about the industry to help provide a common set of facts from which we can all work to restore health to our ailing steel industry. A clear understanding of international trade in steel is crucial to policy recommendations necessary to the American steel industry's recovery.

MYTH

Although foreign governments may be more active in aiding their domestic steel industry, foreign steel producers are essentially as independent as those in the United States.

REALITY

American steel makers are among the few producers in the world subscribing to the traditional economic theory of the profit motive. The Japanese steel industry is orchestrated through administrative guidance from Japan's Ministry of International Trade Industry [MITI] reducing competition among domestic producers in order to maximize gains and minimize problems for the industry as a whole. When operated as a unit, the Japanese steel industry is insured optimum scale economies and efficiency.

In recent years, national steel industries within the EC have become increasingly government owned and operated units. For example, in France, Italy, and the United Kingdom, the Government controls 100 percent of the steel production by integrated producers. In Belgium, the Government controls 78 percent of integrated production. Thus, social and political considerations can receive more attention than what makes good economic sense, which has meant dumping and subsidizing in order to sell steel at any price in order to maintain employment.

Because steel is the necessary material for any industrial economy and its manufacture is a major source of employment, less developed countries [LDC's] desiring an industrial base have sought to develop a steel production capacity, regardless of its profitability. Due to the enormous finds and organizational capacity required to catch up, the Government in an LDC must be the leading force in society for industrialization. Therefore, most steel industries in the Third World are government owned and operated. For example, in Latin America, the Governments of Mexico, Venezuela, and Argentina control 100 percent of their integrated steel production while the powerful Brazilian steel industry is 77 percent government controlled. Other major U.S. competitors such as South Korea and Taiwan are also 100 percent government controlled.

MYTH

Globally, the steel industry continues to be guided by free market principles, similar to those adhered to by U.S. corporations.

REALITY

The U.S. steel industry is one of the last in the world to remain tied to the traditional economic concept of free market trade. The Japanese steel industry was created and defined largely by Government industrial policy which protected it from many of the adverse effects of free market competion. Past Government actions have included bail-outs of large firms facing bankruptcy, encouraging collective investment efforts among producers, forming cartels to prevent price collapses and purchasing excess production. The Japanese steel industry has developed a 142 million net-ton capacity, far more than is needed to meet domestic demand which has not exceeded 69 million tons since its peak in 1973. Thus, producers have pressured the Government to maintain high export levels when domestic demand is low. The U.S. market has been primary destination for Japanaese steel in the past.

The EC has sustained overall steel production levels through the use of subsidies and formulated policy pursuant to regional employment problems. Subsidies, rather than efficiency or comparative advantage, have become the decisive market force. Prior to the 1982 U.S.-EC arrangements which restricted EC steel exports to the United States, the large volume and price effects of dumped and subsidized steel were found to have caused material injury to the U.S. industry in the several successful 201 petitions filed before the ITC. In 1981, EC surplus steel production capacity was estimated by the EC to be over 50 million net tons, a number equal to 40 percent of the total quantity of raw steel produced in the United States that year.

Steel production and export levels of LDC's have been substantially influenced by each State's requirements for foreign exchange and severe debt problems. Expansion in the 1970's overestimated the volume of domestic demand and by the 1980's coincided with the stagnation of world steel demand which contributed greatly to global excess capacity in steel. LDC's are using these new steel plants to maintain domestic employment and generate foreign exchange needed to continue payments on their foreign debt by producing for export. This determination to exports at any cost led to the export of 6,340,000 net tons of steel to the United States in 1983, an increase of 57 percent over 1982 levels. Subsidized, low-priced steel exports hardly reflect the normal working of a free market.

MYTH

Restricting imports into the U.S. market would be an unheard of action in international steel trade.

REALITY

Import restrictions have been a part of the national policy of most of the major competitors of the American steel industry for many years. The Japanese steel industry was formally protected by the government until the early 1960's and is now protected by structural barriers to imports, notably the refusal of large trading compaines to handle imported steel. In 1982, steel imports rose to 3 percent of apparent domestic consumption, rising to 4 percent by 1983. Import penetration levels of 3 or 4 percent caused largely by imports of Korean Steel are viewed by the Japanese with the same concern presently registered by American producers suffering from import penetration levels over 25 percent. In the future, more formal barriers to imports may return.

The EC has limited imports to a maximum or 12 million net tons or to about 10 percent of apparent EC steel consumption per year. In addition, the community has negotiated a comprehensive array of restrictive bilateral agreements with each of its major foreign steel suppliers. Any products not covered are monitored against minimum import price levels as established by the EC.

The LDC's have limited most steel imports to those products which indigenous producers do not or cannot make in sufficient quantity. During the establishment of production capacity and during periods of expands production or import levels, market forces are severely constrained. Access for foreign steel to LDC markets is nearly universally restricted to satisfying only demand which the domestic industry is unable to satisfy.

Foreign government control of much of the free world's steel production is an established fact which we can neither ignore nor wish away. To expect the American steel industry to compete automatically with foreign competition, organized and operated on a national basis with substantial Government involvement and support is a denial of reality. The American steel industry need Government assistance to restructure and regain the competitiveness necessary to survive in a world steel market which is no longer guided by traditional free market principles.●

SISTERS OF CHARITY COMMEMORATED

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I am pleased to recognize and pay tribute to the Sisters of Charity of Saint Joseph's at Emmitsburg, MD, on the anniversary of its founding on July 31, 1809, by Elizabeth Ann Bayley Seton. Elizabeth, known as "Mother Seton," based the rule of her foundation on the French Daughters of Charity, with which the Emmitsburg community affiliated 30 years after her death. In commemoration of their 175th anniversary, the Emmitsburg community and six additional American communities, all founded by Mother Seton, will hold an anniversary celebration at Emmitsburg during the weekend of July 28 through July 30 with a Eucharistic liturgy on Sunday, July 29.

Mother Seton is special not only to Marylanders but to Americans for historical, humanitarian and spiritual reasons. Principally, she is noted for having founded the first order of women religious in the United States and for having established the free school at Emmitsburg which was the precursor of the American parochial school system. She is unique in American and church history as the first and, to date, only native of the United States to be canonized by the Roman Catholic Church. More than a century and a half later, tens of thousands of visitors annually retrace her steps, some as tourists to visit her houses as fine examples of colonial architecture, others as pilgrims to her shrines to seek her intercession in their prayers, and still others simply to absorb the peace, serenity and spiritual strength of the land she walked.

The development of the seven religious communities of American Sisters of Charity which today trace their origin to Elizabeth Ann Seton is a continuation of her own story: response to human need, cooperation and dialog with the leaders of the church in America and prayerful discernment of one's personal calling amid the many claims on energy and resources. At the time of Mother Seton's death in 1821, the original community of 5 sisters had grown to 50. Today, from her original founding of the Sisters of Charity of Saint Joseph's in Emmitsburg, the following seven North American religious communities trace their origin and total some 7,500 members: the Daughters of Charity of Saint Vincent de Paul; the Sisters of Charity of Saint Vincent de Paul of New York; the Sisters of Charity of Cincinnati; the Sisters of Charity of Saint Vincent de Paul of Halifax; the Sisters of Charity of Saint Elizabeth, Convent Station, NJ; the Sisters of Charity of Seton Hill, PA; and most recently the Sisters of Charity of the Immaculate Conception, New Brunswick, Canada. In recognition of their mutual heritage, the seven communities have formed the Federation of Elizabeth Seton's Daughters.

When Mother Seton established her community in Emmitsburg she defend its objectives as "works of piety, charity and usefulness, and especially for the care of the sick, the succor of aged, infirm and necessitous persons, and the education of young females." Today the 7,500 individual American Daughters of Charity and Sisters of Charity carry on the work of their founder in the United States, Canada, and in foreign missions.

Mr. President, the compassion and spiritual comfort of the Federation of Elizabeth Seton's Daughters have touched the people of their communities deeply and their programs have benefited the many people they have served. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Daughters and Sisters of Charity for their outstanding work and in wishing their members continued success in carrying on the noble and necessary work of Elizabeth Ann Seton.●

PRESIDENT ALFONSIN'S SPEECH TO THE NATION

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr President, last December, Argentina returned to democratic civilian rule after many long years of military government. Since then, President Raul Alfonsin has worked to consolidate the foundations of freedom there and to strengthen the democratic process. In this task, President Alfonsin and the Argentine people face a tremendous moral, political, and economic challenge, that of nurturing a newborn democracy. Thus far, they have met that challenge.

Now, however, Argentina is confronting a serious financial crisis, which has the potential to undermine the political and economic order. In a time of global economic recession which has been particularly harsh on our neighbors to the south, Argentina is under great pressure to meet the demands of its $45 billion debt. Thanks to rising U.S. rates, the interest owed on this debt has increased 30 percent since January alone. At the same time, austerity measures—taken to meet these financial obligations—threaten to place the burden unjustly on workers' wages and on vital social programs. It is, in short, a narrow, difficult path which Argentina is on; one flanked by financial bankruptcy, political instability and social injustice.

Several weeks ago, President Alfonsin addressed the Argentine people on the precarious economic situation they face. Calling on the Argentine nation to persevere in self-sacrifice, his speech outlined a courageous economic program designed to meet the challenge, reduce fiscal deficits and government waste, stimulate foreign investment, increase exports, and curb tax evasion. Most importantly, it does not place the burden of sacrifice on those least able to bear it; it upholds the government's responsibility to social justice and the country's poor. As President Alfonsin put it:

I am not asking anyone to give anything to his country as a gift, although I know the generosity of the Argentine people; I am rather asking everyone to do something with the government. I am not asking anyone to do it for his government but along with the government.

President Alfonsin and the Argentine people deserve great praise for their courage and determination in maintaining and strengthening their democracy through common effort. I ask that excerpts from the text of President Alfonsin's speech be printed in the RECORD.

The excerpts follow:

EXCERPTS FROM PRESIDENT RAUL ALFONSIN'S SPEECH TO THE NATION FROM OLIVOS PRESIDENTIAL RESIDENCE IN BUENOS AIRES ON JUNE 28, 1984

Allow me tonight to share with all of you a few thoughts. At these crucial times when men and peoples firmly believe that they are facing enormous challenges which demand efforts, discipline, and self-sacrifice, it is necessary to pause and reflect.

We cannot deny the seriousness of the crisis we are experiencing. Nothing will be accomplished by closing our eyes and clenching our fists. We will merely continue deceiving ourselves and refusing to accept a difficult, but not insurmountable, reality.

The first concrete step necessary to overcome this situation is to confront it, define it realistically, and make a joint effort to find solutions. Thus I will explain some of the main ideas, the guidelines, which the constitutional government has been following to cope with the need to rebuild the postwar economy which, as you all know, we have inherited.

Once I outline these guidelines I will call upon each and every one of you to accept your share of responsibility because a joint and equitable effort will be our only guarantee for success.

I am addressing my fellow citizens, asking them to make an exceptional effort capable of repairing current economic imbalances. I am doing so assured that most Argentines, irrespective of their political leanings, will fall in line behind this drive for reconstruction which has already been launched and will now receive a new impulse from the long-term economic and social plan for industrial, financial, and agricultural recovery which the economy minister will soon announce to the nation.

No one can deny that we Argentines are living under severe pressures. These pressures stem from the fact that we have retaken the democratic path and if we draw from our collective memory we will recall that the beginning of military cycles was fraught with much stronger pressures. The truth is that the time when a few made the decisions for the entire community is long past. The beginning of our democratic life has been surrounded by a constellation of problems, many of them distressing. We are burdened by a heavy political, cultural, moral, economic, and financial load, and we are the ones who must rise to the current challenge.

It is true that we have recovered the state of law and that the majority rules with full respect for minorities. However, it is equally true that we feel somewhat lost and that sometimes it seems to us that we lack the necessary strength to overcome obstacles.

Millions of Argentines are experiencing freedom and democracy which youngsters before were not able to enjoy. We have welcomed some superficial disorders to our lives typical of freedom, but we must be aware that the more or less noisy expression of differences is not enough to consolidate a democratic system. As we have said, this system was not established 200 years ago. It is a system which must be zealously protected, just as protected as a newborn baby. It would be highly dangerous for people not to distinguish between a freedom still in its consolidating state and the definitely consolidated freedom achieved in other countries.

Freedom is necessarily linked to reason and in order to be a free man it is necessary to join efforts with other men to defend the democratic system and to make it more just. We are proud of the firmness and courage with which the Argentine people are facing the calamity of a crisis which is violently affecting them. We thank them for their efforts and patience in their struggle against great difficulties.

Not only, however, is this crisis attacking the Argentine people. There is, as in war, a treacherous psychological action aimed at breaking the resistance of the Argentine people through a defeatist skepticism. The Argentine people are better tempered than many of their leaders and many times know by intuition the truth which they are not being told. The Argentine people do not believe those who are to a great extent responsible for the current situation nor do they believe in the frivolous irresponsibility of people who demand magic and immediate solutions.

The world is going through one of the most serious crises in history, worse in some aspects than that of 1930. All nations are affected by this situation, which can be labeled as truly malignant. The underdeveloped countries are bearing the worst part of the crisis. Latin America is a clear example of the mechanisms used, mechanisms which have created an unbearable general indebtedness, worsened by the arrogant impunity which permits increased interest rates.

The Argentine people know that our foreign debt was contracted not to capitalize us but to consolidate our dependence and impose a model disregarding the will of the people. The people also know that this debt is generating enormous and arbitrary interest rates, a situation which if not immediately corrected will increase adverse effects on unemployment and real salaries.

We have already clearly stated: We will pay our legitimate obligations but we will not accept recessive measures or the reduction of workers' salaries.

Can anyone believe that at this stage of our civilization, in a totally interdependent world, whenever there is well-being it is handled so as to benefit the financially affluent, and whenever there is a crisis these very same affluent sectors cast it on the shoulders of the week?

The creditors urge Latin American countries to pay off their debts, to increase their interest rates, to reduce the incomes of their workers, and to stifle their economies. As if all this was not enough they continue to discriminate against imports as the terms of trade deteriorate.

The political will of industrialized nations, of international credit organizations, and of international banking sectors must change so as to find a correction of the conventional principles which have been applied so far, so that each specific case can be negotiated in an equitable manner. Authorized spokesmen of the industrialized world agree with this viewpoint.

The main objectives of the independent economic policy which the Argentine Government has been following and will continue to follow are to increase economic activities, improve income distribution, and curb the rate of inflation. These objectives compel me to call upon all Argentines for a supreme effort because we must realize that an independent policy requires joint efforts from all. It demands a solidarity effort made to the fullest possible extent. Only in this way will we be able to continue repairing Argentina's unbalanced economy and lay the foundation for a sustained process of improvement and growth in the standards of living of all. We know that we have the human and material resources to attain this objective if we act in a coherent and decisive manner when handling the various economic variables.

As I call upon you for this effort I tell you in advance that we will avoid the pitfall of allowing the burden of sacrifice to fall upon the shoulders of those who are the least prepared to bear it. Sacrifices must be shared and borne mainly by those who are better prepared for them.

As far as the government goes, its efforts will be directed toward the reduction of the fiscal deficit and will be based on strict austerity which we propose to make even more rigorous every day. According to the provisions of the national budget, the draft of which has been submitted to Congress, any expenditure not duly justified and any vacancy not proven indispensable will be frozen.

The example of austerity should begin at the top. Therefore, I exhort all those who hold public positions, whether elected or appointed in organizations or enterprises at the national, provincial, or municipal level, to make sure that the salary for their services does not differ from the average salaries in their area.

Another essential aspect has to do with the productivity of state enterprises. In this regard I have ordered that indicators of the efficiency of these enterprises be established so that they are rigorously managed to ensure the best utilization of the important resources which they have available. We will closely monitor the enterprises of the public sector for their managerial efficiency through the participation of workers and professional associations.

At the same time we will speed up as much as possible the privatization of the numerous enterprises and activities which have been unduly incorporated into the public sector in recent years and which, because of the goods they produce or the services they provide, cannot justifiably be kept within the public sector. The commission which has already been created to that effect will be joined by representatives of the private sector who can contribute with their experience to the prompt implementation of this privatization plan.

Finally, as far as the effort of the government is concerned, the large subsidies which are widely granted without sufficient economic and social reasons will be reviewed.

As for the entrepreneurial sector, and in order to stimulate the growth of the economy, the government will encourage investments in new equipment, machinery, and technology. It will do this by promoting internal savings that will be channeled into productive investments. To this end, the government will resort to measures that will include instruments of credit intended for that specific purpose.

We will make it clear that the financial sector, which provides a public service, should be committed once and for all to production. The Central Bank will step up the task of supervising the banking system to ensure that every last peso is earmarked for production and the creation of social wealth, and that not a single cent is taken out for speculation.

Likewise, stimulus will be given to direct foreign investments to the extent that they bring in technology the country lacks, considering that we are greatly behind in the accumulation of this new resource of production in modern society. These foreign investments will also be encouraged in activities for which there is not sufficient domestic capital.

In this regard, I feel that current international conditions could, and I am not speaking from a utopian point of view, make Argentina attractive for permanent investment of these capitals if, as we plan, the appropriate economic and social atmosphere is created and clear-cut rules of the game, compatible with the autonomy of our development, are established.

Our large foreign debt makes a substantial increase of exports necessary. Argentina has excellent conditions for obtaining constantly growing surpluses in its trade balance because of the favorable difference between our foreign sales and purchases. We plan to make additional headway in this field. We propose to carry out an aggressive drive aimed at increasing exports, for which we must maintain a suitable exchange rate without overvaluing the national currency in which, as everyone knows, the nation has had a painful experience. However, we must also rule out undervaluation because its consequences have been equally negative.

In this regard the best way to establish the most suitable exchange rate will be based on the favorable development of these three variables: exports; current account balance, excluding servicing of foreign debt; and the level of international reserves.

As to the more economically endowed sectors, I find it scandalously immoral that under the present circumstances there could be Argentines who attempt to evade taxes. In just 30 days we will implement exceptional measures to curb tax evasion. This is the deadline I hereby set for taxpayers to put their accounts in order. After this grace period, if you want to call it that, they will find that it is immensely better to fulfill their obligations than face the severe measures which will be enacted. It is only natural for taxes to be applied first to those who are able to pay them. Therefore special emergency taxes will be levied on those persons whose assets or profits exceed certain limits. Provincial and municipal governments are hereby urged to implement, within their jurisdictions, measures in keeping with the crisis which has befallen our country.

As for the labor sectors, we are aware that as far as social benefits go, we must carefully manage what little we have for some time. Being able to reconcile this harsh reality that we have inherited with our heartfelt objectives of social justice is a great responsibility for the government but it is also a challenge for the understanding and cooperation of the various social sectors involved.

There are many shortcomings in health, education, housing, and nutrition. In accordance with the basic principles of justice we must give priority to those who have received the hardest blow during the years when policies against the people were implemented. Whatever has to be postponed should be understood as the contribution of one for the other and not as the violent displacement of one by the other. This is the difference between a distribution struggle, in which the weak are always the losers, and the social solidarity we advocate. This is the basis of the policy we are implementing. This is the basis of the progressive reforms in the programs of health, education, nutrition, and housing for the poor.

Regarding the salary policy, it will be implemented within the general framework of the goals established for a 6- to 8-percent increase in real salaries during 1984. The salary increases will be staggered in accordance with the economic situation and in order to favor the low income sectors.

Salary increases above the established guidelines will be postponed and they will represent savings when granted later with readjustments and interests. Other sectors of society, depending on their capacity to save, will be included in a system for saving part of what they would otherwise spend.

A deviation from the established guidelines would be a severe blow to the economy considering its current situation. The people responsible for these decisions, public employees, businessmen, and workers must understand that by violating the salary guidelines they are showing lack of social solidarity because this results in inflation and unemployment.

We Argentines, if we want our country to survive and if we do not want to play into the hands of the enemies of the fatherland, must understand that to solve our problem we need dialogue and conciliation more than strikes and conflict. We will continue to fully guarantee the constitutional right to strike but we will demand the fulfillment of all the legal steps to resolve them. Only by having a great sense of responsibility can personal interests and the nation's needs be reconciled. For each hour of strike we avoid we will be adding an hour of production and goods to the service of the community.

I have said many times that modern societies need strong and representatives unions. The current situation compels these unions, just as it does the rest of us, to use commonsense. In an unbridled struggle for income distribution it is certain that inflation would thwart any sacrifice.

As I have said before, the effort which the salaried sector is asked to make will be reciprocated by the heavier tax burden which the more economically endowed sectors will bear through a higher cost for displaying wealth and severe measures to curb tax evasion. The implementation of these measures, which constitute the guidelines of the government plan, will be based on an equitable distribution of sacrifices throughout Argentine society and the setting of clear-cut and permanent rules which will free productive sectors from uncertainty during the implementation of the plan.

The constitutional government is the leader and the guarantor, but not an autocratic arbiter, of this fair distribution of benefits and opportunities. Thus it calls for a broad and responsible participation of the people and their intermediate organizations to oversee its implementation.

Pluralism and participation play a concrete and effective role in modern society; lack of consensus leads to clashes and belligerence. We will seek consensus. We will seek proper harmony between demand and supply of commodities. It is pointless to give the workers money if these workers have not produced goods and services to satisfy demands. In February, as we had promised during the electoral campaign, we proposed to various labor organizations a number of measures and mechanisms for participation which we now reiterate in the assurance that our words have been heard.

We said then that one of the essential conditions of a modern state was the ability to find new ways of interpreting social phenomena. We said that in our modern world democracy could not exist without strong and fully participatory unions. We have always said that democracy and participation within the unions mean allowing the members to have their say, while additionally they mean seeking agreements with the employers and the state on essential economic decisions.

The participation of workers and the organizations which represent them must take place through mechanism for public consensus which will study economic and social solutions. The road toward a national consensus is now paved with the set of historic agreements reached by the political parties on 7 June 1984. We are seeking our fellow citizens for an additional effort. Each social sector will make this effort in keeping with its capabilities. This struggle, in which there can be no deserters, will benefit the Republic. The national government must set the example of severe austerity, but those who have more must be the first to join in.

We Argentines accept the challenge and are willing to cope with the situation, drawing upon our moral reserves. It would seem that we are asking each and every citizen for a high quota of heroism. It is true that sometimes one must be a hero to stay free and be a citizen of a nation, but this time we merely want compliance with the law and the effort necessary to strengthen democracy. If the economy were to be destroyed, democracy would die, and some despot would wring dry a people who would no longer defend themselves.

We all know what it cost the country to live without democracy. This is what we are paying for now. I repeat what I said on the bank of the Parana River on Flag Day. This is a common task. It must be done by the government and the people in common agreement, otherwise it will not be done at all.

I am not asking anyone to give anything to his country as a gift, although I know the generosity of the Argentine people; I am rather asking everyone to do something with the country. I am not asking anyone to do it for his government but along with the government. I ask you all to believe that this effort is necessary and to respond to it. I am sure that Argentina will fulfill its destiny. I trust and we trust, I am sure, in the destiny of the nation.●

KEMMONS WILSON—ENTREPRENEUR EXTRAORDINAIRE

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, Tennessee has produced many illustrious sons and I rise today to honor an exceptional one. He is Kemmons Wilson, an entrepreneur of rare vision who was born in Memphis and hasn't slowed down yet in all his 71 years.

Thirty-four years ago, Kemmons Wilson opened his first Holiday Inn in Memphis, making him virtually the father of the motel industry. Five years ago, a major heart attack slowed him a bit, but he roared back to found new empires, the Orange Lake Country Club and Wilson World, enterprises of time sharing and hospitality for the 20 million annual visitors to Disney World in Florida.

Mr. President, Kemmons Wilson's story is a fascinating example of the business successes that come to the innovative businessman. I submit in the RECORD the story of Kemmons Wilson which appeared in Florida Trend in March 1984.

KEMMONS WILSON: DREAMING NEW DREAMS AFTER HOLIDAY INNS

(The nation's best-known innkeeper hasn't exactly been dozing in retirement. At age 71 he is set to make a new mark in Central Florida.)

(By William Souder)

The gridlock occurring most days on a cloverleaf in the boonies west of Orlando is enough to give trapped motorists headaches and nervous spines. For Kemmons Wilson, a 71-year-old born-again entrepreneur from Memphis, the traffic jam outside the Magic Kingdom is as bracing as two fingers of good Tennessee sour mash. Wilson takes so much joy from the sight that he occasionally drives the four miles from his villa at Orange Lake Country Club just to watch the cars inching along on Route 192. Having built one empire by the edges of America's freeways, the founder of Holiday Inns has chosen to to start his second as close as he can to the bumper-to-bumper madhouse entrance of Disney World.

"I give full credit to Mickey Mouse," Wilson says. "Where else in the world can you set up a business and be guaranteed that more than 20 million people will drive past your front door every year?"

Where else indeed but turnstile-for-a-heart Central Florida? And who better to seize the opportunity? Kemmons Wilson may well be the only man to have had a greater impact than Walt Disney on the traveling public. In 1952 Wilson, already a successful real estate developer, opened his first Holiday Inn in Memphis. Twenty years later, Holiday Inns Inc. opened a new hotel somewhere on the planet every 72 hours. In 1979, having appeared on the cover of Time magazine and been named one of the most important men of the 20th century by The Times of London, Wilson suffered a major heart attack and retired as chairman of Holiday Inns the following year. Within a few months Wilson had found a new line of business—time sharing. It took him only a split second to decide where he would start it.

"I figured Orlando would be the place to come," he says, "So I started looking for land and bought some."

To be precise, Wilson paid $2.5 million for 357 prime acres on Route 192, four miles west of the Disney main gate, and began planning Orange Lake Country Club, a $100 million golf and tennis time-sharing resort. Just like that. The plan called for a 27-hole golf course, an Olympic-size swimming pool and a tennis complex that would include a 7,000-seat amphitheater for major events—all to be flanked by some 1,000 townhouse-style villas. Anchoring the project would be a sprawling $6.5 million clubhouse featuring a waterfall and an 18-hole artificial putting surface in the atrium, plus an additional 168 time-share efficiency units.

By mid-1981 construction was under way. Sales of the first units began in February 1982. To date, Wilson has sold some 6,500 one-week units in Orange Lake, or about 12% of the total planned for the project. Revenues so far have totaled $40 million, nearly as much as the entire U.S. time-share industry brought in only eight years ago.

Wilson calls Orange Lake his "second dream." But despite having stepped down from Holiday Inns, he didn't exactly come out of a sleepy retirement to start the new project. From his Memphis base, Wilson heads a large, family-owned conglomerate of some 90 companies. Most of his operations are involved in aspects of real estate development and management, though he also owns a company that makes nacho chips and picante sauce—a snack fetish Wilson has indulged in almost daily for years.

Even so, Wilson is the sort of oldline entrepreneur who is at his best doing something new, and it's evident that Orange Lake has become his pet. He flies in from Memphis nearly every Tuesday and stays several days, depending on what needs to be done and whom he can find to play tennis in the evenings. Wilson and his wife stay at a villa identical to all the others in Orange Lane, where, like a Holiday Inn, everything is standardized right down to the bedspreads and the silverware. By day he works at a nondescript desk in a corner of the construction office of the clubhouse. He serves as general contractor on the project, partly because it saves him as much as 10 percent on operating costs, mainly because he just plain likes the work.

"I'm a developer," he says matter-of-factly. "To me there's nothing more fun than to go out and buy a piece of land and build something on it."

He is also a stickler for details, most of which he attends to personally. Wilson surrounds himself with the people who have their hands on his project, draftsmen and plumbers and groundskeepers. He is obsessed with the cost of things, pouring over a garbage collection contract one minute, figuring how many manhours it will take to repair tile on the swimming pool the next.

"He is interested in everything," says George Glover, president of Wilson's hotel management group which runs Orange Lake. "The operational end he delegates. When it comes to construction and purchasing, it's all his."

Beside his attention to detail, the book on Wilson is that he always knows exactly what he wants and how to get it for less.

"You're talking to the world's greatest buyer," he says. "Of course, I always say that anything bought right has only been half-sold."

The story of how he dreamed up the hotel chain that spawned an industry is vintage Wilson. Following a family driving trip to Washington, D.C., in 1951—during which they stayed at a succession of motels that varied in every respect save their willingness to charge extra for children—Wilson came back to Memphis determined to build a string of hotels that would be uniform in design where children could stay free.

Originally he thought he'd build them all himself, figuring 400 hotels stretching coast to coast would about do the job. That turned out to be a little out of reach. Wilson built four Holiday Inns in Memphis and then started franchising to other builders. But it was the details that Wilson had right at the outset. On his trip to Washington Wilson had carefully measured and recorded the dimensions of every room he stayed in, so that by the time he got back to Memphis he had not only an idea for a hotel, but pretty much a finished floor-plan.

"Nobody ever designed anything for me," he says. "I always tell 'em what I want so they can draw it up."

Wilson insists that it was only the heart attack that caused him to retire from Holiday Inns. At the time, however, his critics charged that Wilson was better at starting new companies than running big ones. At any rate, Holiday Inns suffered through severe financial travails during the 1970s, and it became clear that it was time for the company to be turned over to professional managers who could streamline operations and move methodically into parallel businesses like casino gambling. It had become, perhaps, no place for an entrepreneur. Wilson gives at least backhanded credence to that analysis, conceding that line management is not his long suit.

"I'm probably a terrible manager," he says. "A guy who is a good manager has more or less a mechanical brain. A guy like me has a more curious brain."

Wilson says that when he retired from Holiday Inns he didn't even know what time sharing was. But in early 1981, while he was visiting a home-building operation he owns in Sarasota, longtime business associate Billy Springer showed him a time-share unit he had purchased on Sanibel Island. Wilson was fascinated. He asked what Springer had paid for his two weeks, and also what he figured the unit had cost to build. Wilson worked out the arithmetic and decided time sharing was a business he ought to be in.

Time sharing struck a chord in Wilson's "curious brain" despite the enormous difficulties facing the fledgling industry. Time sharing's high-risk infancy has been a continuous struggle on two fronts, one for respectability and the other for financial health. The industry has seen more than a few flim-flam operators come and go, hustling low-rent projects through quick conversions of hotels coupled with dicey comeons and high-pressure sales tactics. Such practices have already resulted in restrictive legislation in many parts of the country, including Florida, which last year adopted stringent regulations designed to force time-share developers to clean up their marketing acts. Time-share operators have meanwhile slogged through lawsuits, bankruptcies and a host of unresolved questions about fair assessment and taxation, souring many of their customers with undersold and sometimes uncompleted projects.

Probably the biggest problem for the industry has been public uncertainty and skepticism about how time sharing is supposed to work. Even now, polls indicate that only about one in three people knows what time sharing is. Just what one owns in a time-share unit seems a little murky to everybody, since in most projects the management of the development will eventually be turned over to an owners association which must somehow get consensus from hundreds or even thousands of owners on how to run the resort.

But while its critics believe time sharing is already an idea whose time has come and gone, the industry continues to grow—through admittedly more slowly than its promoters thought it would. In 1983 there were 100 new time-share projects opened in the United States. Total industry sales hit $1.5 billion and are expected to climb another 10% to 15% this year. Victor Parra, executive director of the National Time Sharing Council, says time-share developers are becoming more responsible and buyers more sophisticated.

"The average person who buys time share now is a fairly intelligent investor," Parra says. "You're not going to scam them."

Kemmons Wilson remains unfazed by the industry's tarnished image and iffy financial future, and believes as many as one million families may buy time shares over the next three years. To cash in on that opportunity, he plans to play the game differently and better than others in the business. The promotion program for Orange Lake trades heavily on Wilson's personal credibility. The sales pitch never fails to mention that the resort is being developed by the same man who became the nation's innkeeper.

"We try to run a squeaky-clean operation," he says, adding that time sharing is the "only way the average man can own a second home."

There's no question that, done correctly time sharing can be lucrative. Wilson seems clearly on the right track. Along with his three sons, he controls 100% of the stock in Orange Lake. Circumspect and still feverishly competitive at 71, he is intentionally vague about his costs and profits, but both will certainly be substantial. Counting in land, bricks and mortar, it costs him roughly $100,000 to build one villa in Orange Lake. One-week units are currently priced, according to the time of year a buyer selects at between $5,100 and $9,900. The average price paid for a unit so far has been $6,000, which means that even with no price increases, each villa will return about $300,000 in revenues if the project sells out. That adds up to a potential gross of some $300 million on Wilson's $100 million project. Probably more.

The Wilsons stand to make a bundle from Orange Lake, possibly setting a new industry standard for profitability in the process. The project has already achieved an almost unheard-of efficiency in its frugal marketing operation. The cost of sales at Orange Lake is currently running at about 28% of revenues. Most time-share developers have marketing costs of 40% to 50% of revenues. Wilson keeps his costs down by eschewing third-party brokers (who can take as much as a 30% cut) and selling primarily to the tourist trade that Disney delivers to his doorstep each year. And they're buying. Wilson's 60-member sales force closes a deal with one of every five potential customers who walk through the door. Buyers have come from 39 countries and all 50 states.

Wilson attributes much of his quick success with Orange Lake to its prime location and price amenities package. He spent $3 million on the golf course, another $1 million on the tennis stadium and swimming pool.

"We're pretty sure we have the better mousetrap," he says.

Wilson also draws on the enormous financial muscle of his personal resources. In the old days, Wilson sold Holiday Inn franchises for $500 plus five cents a room per night of occupancy. Times change.

"Back then I could show a guy how to borrow everything he needed to open a Holiday Inn," Wilson says. "But if you want to build something like Orange Lake, you'd better have about $30 million in your pocket to start with."

With only 146 of the proposed 1,000 villas completed, Wilson still has some way to go to finish Orange Lake. Naturally he's already thinking about doing another time share project as soon as he finds the right piece of land, which he says will be somewhere other than in Florida. In the meantime, just to keep busy, he's acquired another 480 acres along Route 192. On one parcel adjacent to Orange Lake he plans to develop a residential community. Down the road toward Disney World he's built a 443-room hotel to be called—what else—Wilson World, which is scheduled to open this month. A great believer in all real estate axioms pertaining to location, Wilson enjoys driving past Wilson World whenever he heads down to the cloverleaf to survey the traffic.

"If you've got the right location," he says merrily, "you can do no wrong."

ONCE AN INNKEEPER, ALWAYS AN INNKEEPER

To Kemmons Wilson, the only thing better than opening a business just four miles from the main gate at Walt Disney World is opening one three miles closer. That's just what he'll do later this month when he cuts the ribbon on "Wilson World."

Wilson World is $10 million, 443-room hotel that Wilson has designed to "fit the needs of the average Disney traveler." While a number of new luxury hotels have been opened or are under construction in the area of late, the founder of Holiday Inns has opted for a more moderately priced ($45 to $65 a night) approach. Kemmons Wilson being Kemmons Wilson, however, Wilson World will come with a few new wrinkles.

For one, the hotel will feature a large, domed-in swimming pool in the center of the building. Guests will be able to swim up to a bar and order a drink without drying off.

Then there is the restaurant. "The average family that comes to Disney World ends up spending a small fortune to feed the kids," Wilson observes. To cut those dining costs, Wilson World's restaurant will be a fixed-price buffet.

Described by one company official as "Kemmons Wilson's baby," Wilson World is also another instance of Wilson's refusal to consider retirement. An ardent tennis buff, he could just as easily hang out at Orange Lake Country Club perfecting his lob. Says Wilson:

"Naw, I try to stay busy all the time. Like to read the want ads, especially the business opportunities. After all, tennis is like lovemaking. You can't do it all the time."●

EDUCATIONAL RIGHTS OF HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

● Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, the Education For All Handicapped Children Act of 1975 and section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 are the primary laws relied upon by those seeking to protect and enforce the education rights of handicapped children. As of 1984, over 2 million children were receiving special education and related services in our public school system. On July 5 the Supreme Court in Smith against Robinson dealt a blow to the protections these laws provide for handicapped school-aged children and young adults.

The Court ruled in a 6-to-3 decision that the awarding of attorney's fees to parents is not allowed under Public Law 94-142, and furthermore, that remedies available under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and section 1983 of the Civil Rights Act are not available when the claim is filed under Public Law 94-142.

The Education For All Handicapped Children Act does provide for a detailed and comprehensive administrative system within the statute itself as the primary means for handicapped children to secure their education. The Court is right in assuming that Congress did not want individuals to bypass this system by bringing suits directly to court under section 504 or section 1983. At the same time, Congress never envisioned Public Law 94-142 as limiting or restricting the civil rights of handicapped children.

By denying attorney's fees under Public Law 94-142, the Court is limiting access to the judicial system only to those families who can afford to pay.

In 1978, when Congress approved section 505 of the Rehabilitation Act and addressed the need for attorney's fees, we were concerned for the rights of all handicapped people. No exception was made for school-aged children. As Justice Brennan so aptly stated in his dissent to the July 5 decision:

It is at best ironic that the Court has managed to impose this burden on handicapped children in the course of interpreting a statute wholly intended to promote the educational rights of those children.

I am pleased to join with my colleague Senator WEICKER in cosponsoring this amendment to Education For All Handicapped Children Act. It is a bill that will clarify the intent of Congress to protect and enforce the educational rights of handicapped children.●

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 1668, CONTRACTS RETAINING PRIVATE COUNSEL TO FURNISH COLLECTION SERVICES

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 10:30 a.m. on Wednesday, July 25, the Senate temporarily lay aside the pending business, H.R. 5798, the Treasury-Post Office appropriations bill, and proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 977, S. 1668, the debt collection bill, under a 60-minute overall time limitation, to be equally divided between the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM].

I further ask unanimous consent that the following amendments be the only amendments in order: a D'Amato amendment in the nature of a substitute and three Metzenbaum amendments to be considered en bloc—the first to limit attorney contingency fees to current standards, the second to increase competition in the distribution of contracts to law firms, and the third to require an annual GAO audit.

I also ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the majority leader or his designee to withdraw the reported committee amendment.

I also ask unanimous consent that at 11:30 a.m., the Senate proceed to vote on the Metzenbaum amendments en bloc, with one vote, to be followed immediately by a vote on the D'Amato substitute as amended, if amended; that to be followed immediately, without any intervening debate, amendment, motion, appeal, or point of order, by a vote on final passage of S. 1668 as amended, if amended.

Further, I ask unanimous consent that paragraph 4 of rule XII be waived; that following the vote on final passage, the Senate resume consideration of the pending business, H.R. 5798, the Treasury-Post Office appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alaska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator from Ohio for his concurrence.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—TAX CONVENTION WITH ITALY

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Tax Convention with Italy (Treaty Document No. 98-28), which was transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States on July 3, 1984; and I ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for Senate advice and consent to ratification, the Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of Italy for the Avoidance of Double Taxation with Respect to Taxes on Income and the Prevention of Fraud or Fiscal Evasion ("the Convention"), together with a supplementary Protocol and exchange of notes, signed at Rome on April 17, 1984. I also transmit the report of the Department of State on the Convention.

Important changes in United States and Italian tax laws and the development of a model tax treaty by the United States made it necessary to replace the existing income tax convention with Italy, which has been in force since 1956.

Among the principal features of the new Convention are the inclusion of the Italian local income tax among the taxes covered by the Convention and a reduction in the tax at source on most dividends. The Convention also introduces a limitation on the taxation at source of interest paid to residents of the other country. It provides a maximum rate of tax at source of 10 percent on royalties.

The protocol provides that the benefits of the Convention are limited to residents of the two countries, and otherwise clarifies and supplements the Convention. The exchange of notes sets out certain understandings between the two governments.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Convention, together with the supplementary Protocol and exchange of notes, and give advice and consent to ratification.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 3, 1984.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Reverend James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Enable us to focus on what is important and not only transitory, on what is essential and contributes to our common good. As we acknowledge our creation by Your hand encourage us to help build a better world, where justice and respect and dignity will be the marks of our humanity. This we pray. Amen.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

GERALDINE FERRARO: A POLITICAL PIONEER

(Mr. DOWNEY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, we have allowed, in this age of information, statistics to masquerade as measurements for every aspect of American life from military power to economic security.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is the things we cannot measure statistically that make us a great people; the lessons of freedom and justice embodied in our Constitution, the hope and love of parents for their children, and the vitality and innovation of our artist and scientists. This is the foundation of our Republic.

Our national spirit knows no index and brooks no poll.

Our spirit and sense of opportunity soared when Walter Mondale chose GERALDINE FERRARO to be his running mate. It has been a long and difficult struggle for the women of our land. Our greatness rests with our ability to confront inequality and set it straight.

We can say with confidence that this daughter of Italian immigrants, self-made in the finest of American traditions, is truly a political pioneer.

Past generations understood the special meaning of the names Abraham, Martin, and John. Future generations will know the importance of GERALDINE, BARBARA, PATRICIA, and LINDY. Their time is now.

As an American, as a Member of this great institution, as a New Yorker and as a proud Italian American, I bear witness to this historic moment—the true beginning of a new political era.

Bellisima, GERRY, bellisima!

REPRESENTATIVE FERRARO WILL CONTINUE TO PURSUE ISSUES OF SPECIAL CONCERN IN THE HOUSE IN COMING WEEKS

(Ms. FERRARO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FERRARO. Mr. Speaker, when I last stood on the floor of this House on June 29, little did I know that I would return less than a month later as our party's nominee for Vice President of the United States.

Because I respect the rules and the Members of this House, I have a problem. My problem is: How do I explain in 1 minute what my 6 years in this House, the people's House, has meant to me?

If there is one negative in this immense and exciting challenge that lies before our Democratic ticket, it is that I will have to give up my congressional seat in order to run.

When I arrived in Washington in January 1979, I had so very much to learn and so many wise and experienced men and women to teach me. Last January, when we mourned the death of our friend and colleague, Ben Rosenthal, I spoke of how much he had helped me find my bearings in this august and historic body. There are many, many others like him on both sides of the aisle, and I thank you.

How well I still recall my first major floor appearance. It was a heartfelt speech on behalf of peace in Cyprus. In the midst of my impassioned rhetoric, the wrong word slipped out and I could not go on because I burst out laughing. John Brademas, who was managing the bill, almost slipped under the table because he did not want to look at me. And all of my colleagues were enjoying the laugh as well. This House, I quickly learned, is a place where we take the issues confronting this Nation very, very seriously but take ourselves a little less seriously.

This is not a farewell address. I plan to spend as much time as possible here in the coming weeks pursuing those issues of special concern to me and the people of the Ninth Congressional District in Queens which I still represent. But I did want you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues to know how deeply I respect and cherish this institution and the distinguished men and women I have come to know over the past 6 tough, demanding, inspiring, and productive years.

Thank you all from the bottom of my heart.

GERALDINE FERRARO: A RECORD TO BE PROUD OF

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to remind our colleagues of the many bills of interest to women and children GERALDINE FERRARO has been pushing here in the House: a private pension reform initiative, child support enforcement, pay equity, insurance discrimination reform, the 1984 Civil Rights Act, and numerous others.

FERRARO has been a leading member of the congressional caucus for Women's Issues. In 1982, she chaired special House Democratic caucus task force on women's issues.

It is a record to be proud of. Certainly GERALDINE FERRARO has done more from her single seat in the House to advance the rights of women and children than the entire Reagan administration put together. No wonder Vice President BUSH is afraid to debate her.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

(Ms. OAKAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, history was made by Walter Mondale last week when he became the first Presidential candidate to choose a woman as his Vice Presidential running mate. He chose a woman of great quality; a leader in our own House of Representatives, our colleague, our friend, GERALDINE FERRARO.

I am convinced that GERALDINE will help lead our country with a conscience and sense of caring. She will have as her ultimate purpose to bring peace to this global community, fairness to all of our Americans, and tranquility to all.

I especially want to thank GERALDINE for the great work she did on the issue that relates to economic justice for women, pay equity. It was GERAL-

DINE and PAT SCHROEDER, along with the help of myself that brought the issue forward, and this means much to the issue of economic justice, particularly younger women, and of course, older women who experience great hardship. So we are blessed to have known GERALDINE; we wish her well. All of us are pledged to work for her leadership in this country and her election and Walter Mondale's election in November.

THE SPOTLIGHT IS ON ALL OF US

(Ms. MIKULSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise with my colleagues in the House to join in the acclaim of the nomination of GERALDINE FERRARO for the Vice Presidency of the United States. I would also like to say that when Walter Mondale turned the spotlight on GERALDINE FERRARO, he turned the spotlight on all of us, all of my congressional sisters. We appreciate that. For Congresswoman FERRARO is not an overnight success. She has worked for 48 years to be the woman that stands before us and before the country today. It was the hard work of her mother and her family and those who helped her.

As we pay respect to Congresswoman FERRARO today, I would like in her behalf to pay the respects to those people who made the nomination possible. First of all, for those wonderful women who worked to give us the vote; those wonderful women who will now work to include us in the Constitution as we include ourselves in the White House.

I would like to thank the mothers of the Congresswomen who encouraged us to pursue excellence, and all of those other women who were role models. I know for people like GERALDINE and MARY ROSE and LINDY and BARBARA KENNELLY, the nuns played a very important role in showing us how women could combine femininity and the pursuit of intellectual excellence.

Last but not at all least, I would like to thank the fathers. We know that GERRY's father died before she could reach maturity. My own father supported me in a way that was unusual for a man of his time. He, like my mother, believed girls should have an education and a real chance to pursue the American dream.

It was our parents, the nuns, the Girl Scout leaders, a lot of us that went into shaping a GERALDINE FERRARO in all of us, and we appreciate the fact that Walter Mondale probably finally brought all of us to the world's attention.

God's speed, GERRY, you are going to need it.

A LONG TIME IN THE MAKING

(Mrs. BOGGS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, history indeed has been made with the nomination of GERALDINE FERRARO as the Democratic Vice Presidential candidate. It was a long time in the making. Two hundred and eight years ago, Abigail Adams cautioned her husband John that when they were writing the Declaration of Independence that they had best remember the ladies, else they would foment a rebellion and grant their own rights to themselves.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the rebellion has arrived, and we indeed have a woman who can head this ticket as the Vice Presidential nominee with grace and integrity and charm, but indeed with a great deal more with her energy and her fine intelligence, and the fact that she is such a good human being. A loving mother, a devoted wife, and a very caring daughter. The very kind of person that a young Member of Congress said to her one day that, "If there are going to be power politics played and great decisions made about the future of our lives, I want to be sure that GERALDINE FERRARO is in that room."

Thank God, Mr. Speaker, she will be in the room. I believe that Abigail Adams would salute the choice!

A STEP FORWARD HAS BEEN MADE

(Mrs. COLLINS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, it is a great deal of pride that I felt while I was sitting in San Francisco last week when GERALDINE FERRARO, by acclamation, was named the nominee for the Vice President of the United States.

It has been said here today that she represents women and that we are all very proud of her. I have a special pride for GERALDINE because I know how hard it has been for a woman to get anyplace. Being both black and a woman, I know that it has not been very easy to move forward with one's career. I was extremely happy for GERALDINE FERRARO, because I knew that a step forward had been made in our history.

If GERALDINE is to become our Vice President in 1984—and I believe she will with our help—I truly believe that the times are opening up in America, and that all of us, black and brown and yellow and red, et cetera, can all feel very proud of her because now we also know that our time has come. I pledge my full, active, aggressive support to her and to our Democratic ticket.

A REPRESENTATION OF HOPE

(Mrs. BOXER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, Congresswoman FERRARO, GERRY, you represent so much hope to all Americans and not just to women. But, to American women, you represent the equality they deserve and they have earned. To American men, you represent the sharing of the awesome responsibility of governing; a responsibility that should be shared.

To American children, GERALDINE, you represent the knowledge that they can pursue their dreams with an increased sense of optimism.

I want to take a moment to talk to the President, who calls your nomination a token. I want to ask the President if he thought it was a token when GEORGE BUSH cast the tie-breaking vote in the Senate for the MX? Did he think it was a token when GEORGE BUSH cast the tie-breaking vote in the Senate for chemical weapons? I do not think that is a token.

GERALDINE, I wish you were there already. I know you are going to be there, and we are with you all the way.

WHAT CAN HAPPEN IN A FEW WEEKS?

(Mrs. KENNELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, is it not wonderful what can happen in a few weeks? We left here on a Friday night quite exhausted, having done our duties as Congressmen and Congresswomen. We return here this morning feeling so good because one of us, one of the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States has become the nominee of the Democratic Party for Vice President of the United States.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, the emphasis is on GERALDINE FERRARO, the woman. But, Mr. Speaker, in a few weeks the focus will be on GERALDINE FERRARO, the individual, the woman we know as an activist on the Public Works Committee and a person who represents her constituency beautifully. A woman on the Budget Committee who understood where we were and where we were going and where we had to go to improve our infrastructure.

This woman is a proud Member of the U.S. Congress. She is now going out on the road, going across America, to explain what we are all about. We who know her best, we who have stood side by side with her, are awfully proud today.

IT IS ABOUT TIME

(Mrs. BURTON of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, other nations have had women leaders for centuries; now the United States will elect a woman Vice President, and it is about time. Walter Mondale showed his insight and good judgment when he chose someone we all know will thoroughly impress the Nation.

We are so pleased that GERRY FERRARO is the Democrat's nominee. But the House is honored to have one of its own to run in this historic campaign. I am especially pleased that she was nominated in my own city of San Francisco.

Mr. Speaker, I join you and other Members in wishing GERRY the best of luck and success in the coming months and years, and we will all miss you, GERRY.

CONGRATULATIONS AND GOOD LUCK

(Mrs. HALL of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to be here today and to congratulate my colleague, GERALDINE FERRARO.

I have never enjoyed a convention as much as I did the one in San Francisco, because not only was it refreshing, it strengthened all of the women in this country who truly believe in equality. To have GERALDINE FERRARO nominated as the Vice Presidential candidate certainly is one of the greatest milestones that America has ever made.

I look forward to working very hard to make sure that she is elected and that she serves us well and that America allows a woman to hold the No. 2 spot.

Congratulations; good luck. We all share your future.

GERRY, WE WISH YOU GODSPEED

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and joy that we welcome back to the House one of our own. Since we recessed, the gentlewoman from New York, GERALDINE FERRARO, our friend GERRY, has transformed American political history and advanced the cause of social justice and equality for all Americans.

As she campaigns across America, all our citizens will come to know her as we do, as one who is compassionate, pragmatic, intelligent, and hard working. She knows what America is all about. She knows about the struggles of the average family. She knows what it means to shop, what utility bills can do to a family budget. She knows the value of a decent education for our children, and the special problems women face in our society. She has a deep and abiding concern for world peace and human rights. She is a tribute to this great body, the House of Representatives, the people's House, the body closest to the people.

GERRY, we wish you Godspeed.

NOT A WOMAN, NOT A MAN, BUT A VICE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

(Mrs. BYRON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, let me say to GERRY, we came in this body together. I hope she is leaving me behind as she moves on.

One of the things that she mentioned when she addressed this House today was that it has been 6 short years. They have been short; but they also have been long.

One of the things that we were all asked as we arrived here 6 years ago: what it was like to be a woman in a man's world. One of the things that I have consistently said, and I think GERRY has consistently said, is that we are all Members of Congress. We are not men and we are not women. We are Representatives. I think once and for all the Democratic Party has put that to rest. We have a Vice Presidential candidate—not a woman, not a man, but a Vice Presidential candidate.

WE ARE PROUD OF YOU, GERRY

(Mrs. LLOYD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy today to stand here among my colleagues and applaud Mr. Mondale for choosing GERALDINE FERRARO as our candidate for Vice President.

GERALDINE FERRARO is a very hard working, a very articulate, a very capable Member of this body who happens to also be a woman. I think it is important to realize that it is not GERRY's nomination, but the nomination of the Democratic Party bestowed on a candidate who brings enormous talent and ability to this position.

For a long time, when a little boy was born, his parents would say, "You know, he may grow up to be President some day." Now the parents of little girls can also say, "You know, she just may be the first woman President."

It is a great day. I think it has brought a new spirit across America, a spirit that is really capturing the hearts of Americans, that a woman has been chosen. We are proud of you, GERRY.

GERALDINE FERRARO, THE QUEEN OF QUEENS

(Mr. ADDABBO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ADDABBO. My district adjoins GERRY's.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a proud moment for us in the House, and especially for us who live back home with GERRY in Queens, to welcome her here today as Vice Presidential nominee and a Vice President to be, the Queen of Queens, GERALDINE FERRARO.

We in Queens knew the value and the potential of GERRY for many years. We have worked for her elections. It was my privilege as the dean of the New York delegation and a senior Member from Queens to campaign way back in 1978 with GERRY, knowing that she would make a great Representative from Queens, and now the entire Nation will know how great a lady she is, and most important, how great a public servant she is.

GERALDINE FERRARO SHATTERS A MYTH

(Mr. RANGEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my colleagues, those of us from the city of New York, who have so many reasons to be proud, certainly when the House of Representatives knows that we will have somebody not only in the White House that would understand our legislation and understand our constitutional responsibilities, and just as importantly, preside over the other body.

It seems that all of us, Republicans and Democrats, will have a real victory when GERALDINE FERRARO becomes our next Vice President. Of course those of us who have suffered over the years in not having people understand the real problems that we have in the city of New York are going to have a special political joy in knowing that you may not understand it in the House but we will indeed have a friend in the White House who will understand the unique problems that we have in the city.

Certainly from a more important historical view, I think that so many of us in this country who believe that in our own race, our culture, and our backgrounds we have so many citizens who are just born to feel that they cannot dream and aspire to this high office and that women certainly have been historically put into this group, where sometimes their parents and their friends have counseled them not to be courageous in terms of reaching for the highest political office that we have in this country, that we believe that because GERLADINE FERRARO has so prepared herself for this great honor that when she shatters the myth that there are citizens who, just because of their sex and their backgrounds, will not be able to dream of becoming President, that certainly there are other groups in this country who now know that when she carries the torch for herself and for women, she carries it for so many other people who would like to say that in this great country of ours there is nobody who cannot be considered to be President of the United States if he or she is prepared to assume that great responsibility.

A CREDIBLE AND VIABLE CANDIDATE

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago one of us gave thanks to the people who made GERALDINE's nomination possible. I would like to give thanks to the person who has helped make GERALDINE's nomination credible and viable. Of course, that person is none other than GERALDINE herself.

I have heard remarks, and speeches, and asides, that GERALDINE is not qualified for the office. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I do not think anybody is qualified to be President of the United States. There is no experience, there is no job training, there are no university courses, that can qualify a person for this awesome responsibility. But I think if one looks at the Presidents who have achieved greatness and distinction one will see that they all have qualities in common, and indeed qualities in common with GERALDINE.

They have greatness of mind, heart, and soul. They have ability to communicate warmly with people. They have decency. They have humanity. They have horse sense. They have common sense. They have ability to make sensible judgments. They have high intelligence. Above all, they have compassion and love for their fellow man, love for their Constitution, and for their country.

I think these qualities of heart and mind and soul, qualities of character and integrity that GERALDINE brings to this candidacy make her preeminently qualified not only for the office for which she is running, but for the office from which, if she succeeds in her quest she will be separated by but a heartbeat.

FERRARO NOMINATION EVOKES PRIDE IN THE HOUSE

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join my colleagues in welcoming Representative GERALDINE FERRARO back to the House. In the past 2 weeks, she had made us all proud—proud to be Americans and proud to be Members of this House from which a colleague can go forth to be the nominee of his or her party for the office of Vice President of the United States.

For women in this country, this has been an especially exciting time. As Representative FERRARO said herself 2 weeks ago in Minneapolis when she was first introduced by Vice President Mondale as his running mate, "there is an electricity in the air, an excitement, a sense of new possibilities and of pride."

Certainly that excitement was present in San Francisco at the convention last week and it is here in the air today. Everyone returning to Washington must have noticed that Representative FERRARO's candidacy remains the No. 1 item of discussion.

As the father of three daughters, I am thrilled by the Ferraro candidacy. It shows them that all things are possible; that indeed their opportunities are endless. Many young women will look back on this candidacy as the one event that led them to think seriously about pursuing a career in politics and Government; that their contributions to this country are real and lasting.

Finally, Representative FERRARO goes forth not only as a trailblazer, proving to all America what many of us have known—that women are up to the job of the Vice Presidency and the Presidency, but proving, too, that Members of the House have the experience and the political savvy to add much to a national ticket.

There are challenging days ahead for our friend and colleague, GERALDINE FERRARO. I am confident that she will duplicate her many successes here in the House on the campaign trail. And as Vice President I know that she will not only keep the faith with her children, but also with us and the American people.

NORTH CAROLINA'S INVITATION TO GERALDINE FERRARO

(Mr. HEFNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, GERALDINE, I knew all along that it was going to be you, and I told you right back then before you went to San Francisco that it was going to be you. There was no doubt about it.

I want to congratulate you, and I want to say this to you and to all the folks in this House: I was in North Carolina at a family day in China Grove, NC. You did not hear a lot about it in the Washington Post, but there were an awful lot of folks from North Carolina there. Folks were saying to me, "What is GERALDINE FERRARO like?"

I said, "Well, we would like to have her come to North Carolina and talk to you folks about family and what this country is all about." And, GERALDINE, I am extending to you an invitation on behalf of the folks from North Carolina to come to China Grove and to Salisbury and let the folks see you and talk to you and let you talk to them about what this American system is all about.

I congratulate you, GERALDINE, and I just want to say to you what we say in North Carolina. We have got an old saying: "You done good."

CONGRATULATIONS TO GERALDINE FERRARO FROM THE DEAN OF THE NEW YORK DELEGATION

(Mr. STRATTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, as the dean of the New York delegation and as an early supporter and as one who predicted that GERALDINE would be nominated for Vice President, this is the first time that I have had the opportunity to even come close to her since her designation by Mr. Mondale, even though I was at the convention. The minute that GERALDINE's selection was announced, it was impossible to get through to her on the telephone. And at the convention she was surrounded by Secret Service. Even the Speaker's car was stopped in the San Francisco traffic so that GERALDINE's limousine could get by. So I am delighted to congratulate her now, in person.

We are delighted that she is the nominee, and I will predict that not only the Democrats in New York State but also the Republicans in New York State are going to be voting for the Ferraro-Mondale ticket as a result. She has already added the pizzaz that I predicted she would add to the Democratic ticket.

PIONEER SPIRIT OF TEXAS REKINDLED BY FERRARO NOMINATION

(Mr. COLEMAN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the historic selection of GERALDINE FERRARO as nominee for Vice President of the United States certainly comes as no great surprise to those of us who live in the Southwestern part of the United States, and in west Texas particularly, because it is indeed in that same pioneer spirit, which founded our region, that we now will welcome to Texas a new trail blazer in politics and Government.

We in Texas, I think, have been asked perhaps more than some others about how GERALDINE FERRARO will do politically in our region of the United States. Well, the Texas that GERALDINE will find when she goes there will be the same Texas that passed the equal rights amendment as a part of our Constitution over a decade ago. It will be the same State of Texas that elected a statewide candidate named Anne Richards as our current State Treasurer 2 years ago. We are a State, GERALDINE, that will welcome you with open arms because we believe very strongly as Texans that all Americans will vote for candidates based on their ability, not sex, and I for one, GERALDINE, will be more than happy to stand with you in the Southwestern part of the United States and will be proud to escort you all the way from Pecos to El Paso.

GERALDINE FERRARO WELL QUALIFIED AS VICE PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, there is joy in this House and in this Nation this week with the choice of GERALDINE FERRARO as nominee for the office of Vice President. Once again the Democratic Party has reached out to the future and made history and left the Republicans in its wake. The other party may grumble, but they do not know what to say or do, and so what they now are attempting is to attack our Vice-President-nominee for her lack of qualifications.

But let me say to the Members of this House that the fact of the matter is that GERALDINE FERRARO will not only make a great Vice President, she would make a heck of a better President than the current occupant of the White House. GERALDINE FERRARO will not call catsup a vegetable. GERALDINE FERRARO will not regard the arms race as another event in the upcoming Olympics. GERALDINE FERRARO will not favor, in a knee-jerk fashion, the rich over the poor and middle income every time, and the people of this Nation know it.

In my normally politically quiescent district, every day since the nomination of GERALDINE FERRARO we have had at least 15 calls each day asking, how can they help in the Ferraro campaign?

Mr. Speaker, the selection of GERALDINE FERRARO makes us feel good to be Americans.

PRIDE IN AMERICA SURFACES WITH FERRARO NOMINATION

(Mr. BEDELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have many problems in this body, we have many problems in Government, but once in a while a person feels compelled to stand up and say, "I am proud to be in this body, and I am proud to be an American." And at this time today I stand up to say that I am proud to see that for the first time in our history we have said that women and men are equal in terms of serving in our Government, and that we can have either a woman or a man serve as Vice President or President in this land of ours.

Of course, one reason for that is because of the qualifications of the young lady who has been selected for this great honor. We are all proud to serve with GERRY FERRARO. My wife and I talked about this some time ago when there was talk that maybe a woman would be chosen, and we said we hoped it would be GERALDINE FERRARO.

During this recent recess, Congressman BARNEY FRANK from Massachusetts came out to my district to visit my farms and to learn about farming, and it has been mentioned that GERALDINE FERRARO comes from New York and the New Yorkers are glad about that. Let me tell you that GERALDINE FERRARO has also been out to the farms of South Dakota to see how our farmers live and what their problems are. That is the type of a leader she would be, a leader for all of us.

GERRY, we are proud of you. We are proud that you have made possible this great step, not just for yourself, but for all of America where the prejudice that has previously existed is no longer there and where we can now say that it does not matter whether you are a boy or a girl or whether you are a man or a woman; we are going to judge, according to the abilities you have, and everyone has equal opportunity to become a leader in this great land of ours.

"A TALE OF TWO CITIES"

(Mr. SOLOMON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, as the first Republican on my feet this morning and from one New Yorker to another, let me also extend my congratulations to our colleague, the gentlewoman from New York, GERALDINE FERRARO, but at the same time, Mr. Speaker, from one New Yorker to another, let me say that in his keynote address before the Democratic National Convention, Gov. Mario Cuomo called Ronald Reagan's America "A Tale of Two Cities."

Well, Mr. Cuomo, as a fellow New Yorker, your knowledge of Charles Dickens is as weak as your perception of the Reagan record.

Under Carter and Mondale, we had double-digit inflation, economic stagnation, humiliation in Iran. So I would say that Ronald Reagan inherited not two cities but Charles Dickens "Bleak House." After 4 years of Carter and Mondale, America was suffering from another Dickens-style book called "Hard Times."

But then, thanks to Ronald Reagan, inflation cooled, the economy grew, America went back to work, there was more disposable income, more jobs, more opportunity.

That is right. You guessed it, Under Ronald Reagan, America returned to its "great expectations."

So go back and read your Charles Dickens, Mr. Cuomo. You will have plenty of time after November, when Ronald Reagan will take your candidate, Walter Mondale, and beat the dickens out of him (Charles Dickens that is).

THE OLYMPIC SYMBOL

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had one of the most thrilling experiences of my life. In behalf of the Boys' and Girls' Club of Pomona, CA, I had the honor and privilege of carrying this Olympic torch. As we all know, this torch is the symbol of competition, sportsmanship and brotherhood—the qualities civilization has strived for since the beginning.

The crowds that gathered on the streets to watch were a microcosm of our great Nation: young and old; all colors and economic backgrounds. It was an inspiration. The Washington Post has an article this morning that describes how these games have captured the heart and imagination of a city more usually known for its calm, nonchalant sense of self-control.

Both the city of Los Angeles and the Olympic committee have done what can only be described as a magnificent job of pulling this whole thing together. Despite the unfortunate Soviet boycott, a record number of nations will attend the XXIII Olympiad. Our athletes are ready, the city is ready and the American people are ready. Beginning this Saturday, in Los Angeles the world will witness firsthand that America is standing tall and proud.

THE QUALIFICATIONS OF GERALDINE FERRARO

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to congratulate my colleague, the gentlewoman from New York, GERALDINE FERRARO, on her selection as the Vice Presidential nominee of the Democratic Party.

While in my home area over the district work period in southern California, I was asked from time to time for my comments on the selection of GERALDINE FERRARO as the Vice Presidential nominee on the Democratic ticket. I told my friends that, well, I think she is as qualified, GERALDINE FERRARO is, to be Vice President, as Rose Byrd is to be Chief Justice of our State Supreme Court. I think there is an interesting analogy. Rose Byrd never practiced law in the private sector, never served as a trial court judge, never served as a district court of appeals judge, and yet there she sits, Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court, and her stewardship has brought that institution to the point of real serious criticism.

I think it is appropriate to examine the qualifications and the voting record of any of us that stand for public office. Sex is irrelevant. We should judge political candidates on their qualifications and on how they vote. GERALDINE FERRARO has not run statewide. She has not occupied a position of leadership in the House.

The big spending voting record of the distinguished gentlewoman from New York, GERALDINE FERRARO, will say to Americans that if she is elected as our Vice Presidential nominee, we can expect more of this big spending practice from this Democratic leadership.

I do not think the American people want that and I think the administration of Ronald Reagan will demonstrate very clearly the contrast for the people to select which course they choose for our country to follow.

MISSING CHILDREN

(Mr. LEWIS of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to offer my congratulations to my colleague, the gentlewoman from New York, on her nomination.

Mr. Speaker, pretty, 8-year-old Christy Luna vanished from near her Greenacres City home in May.

Within 24 hours, this Child Keyppers' poster was in store windows, on telephone poles, and in the hands of police officers in three States.

Within a week the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, through its missing children information clearinghouse, had sent details of Christy's disappearance to police agencies all over the United States.

Christy Luna hasn't been found and intense, cooperative efforts such as this don't always produce results but they sure do increase the chances of finding the Christy Lunas of this world.

Mr. Speaker, for the kids I urge you and my other colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 301 which urges States to establish statewide missing children clearinghouses and H.R. 5826 which provides the means to do just that.

Please join me on this important legislation for the Christy Lunas in the world.

A GOOD TIME FOR GERALDINE FERRARO TO BEGIN CAMPAIGNING

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I, too, extend my felicitations to our colleague, the gentlewoman from New York, GERALDINE FERRARO. She is not only a competent lady, but in my mind, she is also a lucky lady, because she begins her travels around the country at a time when the economic news is also at its pinnacle and at its happiest since I have been a Member of Congress; quite a contrast from 1983 when there was a parade of Members of the House who would take this podium to decry the state of the economy and to blame the President of the United States for those conditions.

As GERALDINE begins her campaign now, she can begin her campaign in a day when more people are employed in the United States of America than at any time in the history of our country, when the gross national product is up beyond expectations, when inflation is down beyond the wildest dreams of every American householder. It is a good time for GERALDINE to begin her campaign. She will have a happy country throughout which she can campaign and the problems that remain, we together in the House will help her as Members of the House are supposed to do.

SENIOR CITIZENS WILL BE HAPPY WITH GERALDINE FERRARO

(Mr. PEPPER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I know of no group in America who would profit more from having GERALDINE FERRARO in the White House as Vice President than the senior citizens of America.

I was chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging 6 years ago when GERALDINE first came to the House and became a member of that committee. At the same time, she became a member of the Subcommittee on Health and Long Term Care, of which I was then the chairman and still am in the chairman's position.

From the very beginning GERALDINE FERRARO attended the meetings. She was active in the work of the committee. She was very active in the passage of numerous pieces of legislation which that committee sponsored before this House. GERALDINE FERRARO is the author of pension legislation which will help guarantee the economic security of millions of older women in the decades to come.

I shall never forget the way she fought to prevent any cuts in Social Security when that matter was before this House in 1983, nor shall I forget her dedication, her determination to prevent any more payments being required of people covered by medicare or any raising of the age of eligibility, as is now proposed by the administration. No one has fought harder to preserve those programs and the principles which affect the health and well-being of the elderly than GERALDINE FERRARO.

I will always remember an important hearing I attended with GERALDINE in her district on the subject of alcoholism and the elderly. The hearing drew a large crowd and evoked keen interest among the senior citizens. The noted actor Jason Robards was the star witness and he gave a moving testimonial of his own experience as a victim of alcoholism and his struggle to overcome it.

During her 6 years in Congress, GERALDINE FERRARO's devotion to the elderly has set an example and a standard which all of us would be proud to follow. She is one of those dedicated to the cause of the elderly, faithful in pursuit of the means to make life longer and healthier and happier for those deserving people of our population.

I say with pride, no Member of this House or the other body is more faithful to, has served more ably the cause of, and would be more meaningful to the senior citizens of America in a position such as the Vice Presidency than our distinguished and beloved colleague, GERALDINE FERRARO.

NOMINATION OF GERALDINE FERRARO AS VICE PRESIDENT

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, what many people, many pundits, many experts fail to recognize about politics is that each election is a special year, has a special chemistry to it that makes it different from any other election year. So many people are looking at this year and are trying to apply what happened in the 1980 election as though somehow or other it is applicable to this year. It is not.

GERALDINE FERRARO has added a special, magical quality to this political year that makes it different from anything else that has happened in the history of our country. She has the intelligence, she has the toughness, she has the savvy that we have all witnessed here on the floor of Congress.

She is like E.F. Hutton to people here in Congress on women's issues, on issues of the budget. But now, as she begins to speak across this country on the issues of arms control, of the environment, of women's issues, she will also be like E.F. Hutton. When she talks people will listen. When she talks people who have never listened before, will listen.

That is what is different about this year. That is what is magical about this year, and that is why the Democrats are going to win this year in November.

NOMINATION OF GERALDINE FERRARO AS VICE PRESIDENT

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in congratulating GERALDINE FERRARO as the Democratic nominee for Vice President of the United States. I have had the opportunity in the 4 years that I have been in this body to office directly across the hall from Mrs. FERRARO and serve on many caucus committees together, and I can personally testify to her competence and ability.

GERALDINE FERRARO will be a superb representative of the American family and of opportunity that only this country provides. As the father of two daughters and the husband of a physician, I am particularly proud to be a Member of this body and to be an American. This is not just a great day for women. This is a great day for all Americans.

NOMINATION OF GERALDINE FERRARO FOR VICE PRESIDENT

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, the nomination of GERALDINE FERRARO for Vice President of the United States has cheered the Congress, rallied the Democratic Party, and taken America by storm. In one bold, dramatic stroke, the political landscape has been transformed, never again to be the same.

Her achievement and the savoring of it by Americans of every background and region goes far beyond the political realm.

In expressing their pride in her, the American people are expressing their pride in America itself.

It makes all of us feel good to know that all Americans may now rise as far as their best efforts and ability will lift them. It makes all of us feel good to know that the children of immigrants can rise to the highest offices of the land. Most of all, it makes all of us feel good to be alive at a time when history leaps forward, offering not only women but all Americans newfound hope for the future.

We, her colleagues in Congress, who know her best, know how hard she has worked here and of the intelligence and practical idealism she has brought to the job. We know how superbly qualified she is to be the Vice President of the United States. If America is proud today wait until you see us on Inauguration Day—when the Chief Justice administers the oath of office to President Walter Mondale and Vice President, GERALDINE FERRARO.

NOMINATION OF GERALDINE FERRARO FOR VICE PRESIDENT

(Mr. DICKS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate our colleague, GERALDINE FERRARO, on being selected as the Democratic nominee for the Vice President. Walter Mondale deserves great credit for an excellent and bold decision. He has opened the door to qualified women seeking the highest offices of our country, and I think he has made a very wise decision.

GERALDINE FERRARO has been an excellent Member of this House. She has done a brilliant job as chair of the Democratic Platform Committee. She has shown, time and time again, her compassion, her care, her sensitivity to the great issues that face this country.

There can be no doubt that she is eminently qualified to be Vice President of the United States, and I think if the high responsibilities of President should fall upon her shoulders, she would be a great President as well.

I have been proud to know her and I was proud to see her family with her on national television. They represent a fine example of an American family with a rich ethnic heritage.

So I take great pride in the selection of GERALDINE FERRARO. I want my colleagues to know that I was in Port Orchard, WA, at a meeting of the local community and there was genuine excitement in the room when the announcement was made that GERALDINE FERRARO would be Mr. Mondale's running mate. The enthusiasm for our future Vice President was no less apparent across my congressional district, and I look forward to having my distinguished colleague, GERALDINE FERRARO, campaign in the State of Washington later this year.

NOMINATION OF GERALDINE FERRARO FOR VICE PRESIDENT

(Mr. LONG of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LONG of Maryland. GERALDINE, we are very proud of you and we congratulate you on your nomination for this high office. When the President first made the choice I did not know quite what to think. As I talked to various people who felt that your place on the ticket as Vice President might hurt more than it would help, I pointed out that this would depend entirely on you or as a woman of your qualities, and how well you conducted yourself in the campaign.

You have demonstrated that as a wise choice that you can put on an excellent campaign.

I want to give you the following proposition: My district has only voted for two Democrats for President in 120 years, 120 years; in the last 2 years my district has been reappropriated to take away 120,000 people who vote 65 percent Democratic. That is a district in which I have never actively tried to get the Democratic President to come in and support me because I always felt that I had to run on my own.

But this time I feel so strongly that you would be an asset to the ticket that I want to invite you to come into my district during the campaign and I will provide the forum for you to come. I hope you can make it because I am sure that you are going to be a tremendous addition to the ticket and a help to us all in the coming election.

I congratulate you and wish you the best in November and thereafter.

NOMINATION OF GERALDINE FERRARO FOR VICE PRESIDENT

(Mr. BENNETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BENNETT. I want to add my feeling of deep happiness and joy at the nomination of Ms. FERRARO.

In my district when this was announced it was received with great pleasure and great approval we had once a wonderful woman who represented my congressional district years ago, Ruth Bryan Owen, the daughter of William Jennings Bryan and she made an outstanding record as Congresswoman. So my district realized from a very practical standpoint that here was a great opportunity to have another great woman come to the center of government.

I just think it is long overdue that a woman would be considered for Vice President and for President. I am so happy and I think that my district is so happy with the fact that now this is behind us and we are going forward, and we are going to use the abilities of all American citizens, whatever their gender may be.

It could not happen to a more lovely, more intelligent, more bright and more dedicated American than GERALDINE FERRARO.

NOMINATION OF GERALDINE FERRARO FOR VICE PRESIDENT

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, one of my senior staffers, a woman, said: "It took 200 years to get to the place that a woman is on a national ticket." It occurred to me, as I watched that historical moment when my colleague, GERALDINE FERRARO, accepted her party's nomination for Vice President, it could take only 100 days for her to become the first woman ever to achieve such high office in this country.

I think of my daughter who was with me at the convention in San Francisco. I think of how I'm glad she had the opportunity to be a part of the history of that moment when GERRY accepted her nomination. I think of my son who was also with me at that time. I know that both my children—male and female—know they, too, can be a part of history. Before that night in San Francisco only my son Jon could have really had that sense of being a part of the political process. Now my daughter, Amy, can as well.

NOMINATION OPENS THE PROMISE OF HIGH OFFICE TO EVERYONE IN THE LAND

(Mr. OTTINGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, on July 26, 1984, we saw history being made with the selection of our colleague, Representative GERALDINE FERRARO, as the Democratic Vice Presidential candidate. It was a significant, exciting development in American politics, and will long be remembered by all citizens. I would now like to take the time to commend this exceptional woman and the invaluable contributions she has made to this Congress.

Having worked closely with her as a fellow member of the New York delegation, it is apparent that Representative FERRARO exhibits the consideration, diligence, and steadfastness that are essential to successfully representing the people. She is an effective leader tuned to the pulse of our national needs and, as such, has exhibited the capabilities that make the difference between a Vice President and a good Vice President.

Perhaps GERRY's greatest strength is that she is so natural. She can translate the meaning of the Reagan cruelties into terms the average American man and woman can understand and relate to.

The fact that Representative FERRARO is a woman is a significant contribution in itself. Females presently constitute less than 5 percent of this legislative body. Thus, as a Representative, GERALDINE FERRARO has furthered the cause of women in our Government. It is with great enthusiasm that we view her Vice Presidential candidacy. To have a woman nominated by a major party for the second highest office in our Government has opened the door not just for women, but for all Americans, regardless of sex, race, or creed. The nomination of Representative FERRARO gives life to the hope that we may better represent the diverse and multifaceted character of this country.

GERALDINE FERRARO: FULLY QUALIFIED FOR THE HIGHEST OFFICE OF OUR LAND

(Mr. LAFALCE asked and was given permisson to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, as a fellow New Yorker, as a fellow Italian-American Catholic, I naturally take tremendous pride in the selection of GERALDINE FERRARO as the Vice Presidential running mate of Fritz Mondale. I know, also, that every woman in America takes special pride in her selection.

Since I have traveled in my district I have come to realize, in a way I never could before, what a responsive chord her selection has struck, not with feminists alone, but with every female from every walk of life.

But, in my district, individuals have been asking: "Once you bet beyond that background, is GERALDINE FERRARO qualified to become, if need be, President of the United States of America?"

I have responded with two basic answers: First, GERALDINE FERRARO is 10 times more qualified today than Ronald Reagan was 4 years ago today.

Second, there are a number of qualities that you should look to when judging an individual.

A famous Protestant theologian summed them up in a book entitled, "Love, Power and Justice." He says, "The great task of a Christian politician is to reconcile the competing demands of love, the use of power, and the requirements of justice."

Having known GERALDINE FERRARO for 6 years, I do not know of any person in the United States, male or female, Democrat or Republican, who can better reconcile these competing demands: love, power and justice; and that is what she will give us as Vice President of the United States, and if need be, as President of the United States. Thank you.

ON GERALDINE FERRARO: WARMTH, INTELLIGENCE, ALWAYS PREPARED

(Mr. OBERSTAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, Fritz Mondale's selection of GERALDINE FERRARO as his Vice Presidential running mate was a bold political stroke, one fraught with insight, but, to those of us who know GERALDINE FERRARO, not a surprise.

It has been my pleasure to have GERALDINE serve on the Subcommittee on Economic Development, which I chair, for the past 4 years and I want people throughout this land to know that she selected that subcommittee because of her interest in jobs, in promoting economic growth, in encouraging development of the private sector, in stimulating those areas that have lagged behind the Nation's general prosperity.

I can attest that, as a member of my subcommittee, she has done her homework, been prepared for the committee hearings, sat through long, tedious hours of hearings and markup sessions; she consistently made pertinent observations, showing keen insight into the process and offered suggestions that bore fruit in our hearings and in our markup sessions.

GERALDINE FERRARO comes prepared for this new challenge, she knows her work, she works hard and is articulate. Those are the qualities that suggest the success of this venture into the Vice Presidential contest. Those are the qualities that will serve her well and would serve well anyone who aspires to, or who may have to assume, the Presidency.

As a fellow Minnesotan, I salute Vice President Mondale for his selection; as dean of the Minnesota delegation, I congratulate GERALDINE FERRARO.

Trust in your own abilities, trust in your experience gained through service in this House and in your competence; you will succeed, you will radiate that goodness and warmth and that intelligence which have been your hallmark in this body.

GERALDINE FERRARO: WELL QUALIFIED AS A NATIONAL LEADER

(Mr. VOLKMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, I too wish to join in the commendation of our colleague, GERALDINE FERRARO, as the nominee for Vice President on the Democratic ticket. As I rushed back to my district from the convention in San Francisco, I found a great deal of excitement about GERALDINE's nomination.

There is no question that we in the House know that she is very well qualified for the position not only of Vice President but also as President. Her work in the House has shown this. She has not only considered the concerns of her own district and her own State, but also of other parts of the United States and during her time here has gotten to know the problems not only of the urban areas but also of the rural areas.

There is no question in my mind that my agricultural farmers back in Missouri will be better represented by GERALDINE FERRARO than the present person in the White House and in the Vice Presidency.

I wish to extend to her, as others have done, an opportunity to come to my district and visit during the campaign because I know that the people of my district will be quite impressed as I have been by her activities here in the House.

And I again wish to say congratulations to GERALDINE. I know we will be seeing her next January as Vice President of the United States.

GERALDINE FERRARO: HER NOMINATION HAS OPENED NEW VISTAS FOR MILLIONS OF WOMEN THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

(Mr. SOLARZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SOLARZ. As a fellow New Yorker, as a fellow member of the Budget Committee, as a fellow Fire Islander, I was pleased as punch with the nomination of GERALDINE FERRARO as Vice President on the Democratic ticket.

We have worked closely together over the course of the last 6 years. During that period of time I have come to develop enormous admiration for her capacities as a Member of Congress, and as a citizen of this country. She has made a great contribution to the work of the Budget Committee, she has been an extraordinarily effective member of the New York delegation and of the Democratic leadership of the House.

Several of my colleagues have spoken about what GERALDINE FERRARO's nomination means to the people of our country. But I would like to say that I was overseas, as fate would have it—I rarely travel but now and then I am out of the country—when news of Congresswomen FERRARO's nomination hit the press.

And I can tell you that in Indonesia, in the Philippines, in Singapore, this was front page news. And I suddenly came to realize that her nomination meant a lot not only to millions of women in our country but to hundreds of millions of women around the world, in small villages in Africa, in Latin America, in Asia who sensed in her nomination for the second highest office in our land the possibilities for human achievement that might one day be open to them as well.

And in that sense, regardless of what happens in this campaign, and I truly hope that we are talking not just about a candidate for Vice President but about the next Vice President, the mere fact of her nomination has opened up vistas of possibility for millions and millions of women throughout the world who sense in her remarkable achievement the possibilities and potentialities for comparable achievements on their part as well.

And in the final analysis our country and this world will obviously be as great as the contribution which all people, men as well as women, of all races and religions, can make.

This has been an enormous step forward, not only for women in America, but for women and for other people all over the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5833, a bill that amends the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to permit the Secretaries of Commerce and Transportation to better handle defaults under the title XI, Ship Financing Guarantee Program. Included in the amendment is a new section 3 which contains purely technical amendments to the recently enacted Shipping Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-237).

This bill, supported by the administration, would permit the Secretaries of Transportation and Commerce to assume an obligor's rights in the event of default on a federally guaranteed obligation, rather than paying, as is required under current law, the entire principal and interest within 30 days of demand by an obligee. The assumption of the debt by the United States as guarantor will relieve the financial burden on the title XI fund at a time when economic conditions have exerted severe pressure on the reserves in the ship mortgage account.

The bill also sets up more stringent criteria for the Secretary of Transportation in the issuance of guarantees, so that the problems of default, mainly due to overtonnaging, may be alleviated. In the case of guarantees for fishing vessels, the Secretary of Commerce, under the terms of this legislation, would measure the obligation by its consistency with the fisheries resources policy of the United States.

This is needed, remedial legislation which I urge my colleagues to support.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may continue.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5833, a bill to amend certain provisions of title XI of the 1936 Merchant Marine Act and to make technical changes, corrections to the maritime laws necessitated by Congress' enactment of the Shipping Act of 1984 earlier this year.

The title XI ship financing guarantee program of the 1936 act provides Federal guarantees to back the obligations incurred by persons who purchase or pay for the reconditioning of certain types of vessels and facilities set forth in the law. Administration of the program resides within the Maritime Administration of the Department of Transportation, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration of the Department of Commerce.

In recent years, the number of defaults on title XI-backed obligations has increased markedly, leading to a significant drain on the Federal Treasury as both Departments have been required to pay off in full the guaranteed portion of these obligations. This bill addresses that situation by allowing either Secretary to assume the obligor's periodic payments rather than being required to make an entire lump sum payout.

H.R. 5833 also addresses problems which have resulted from the increasing utilization of title XI-backed financing for speculative, tax-shelter motivated investment in commercial vessels. Nowhere, I submit, has that practice been more rampant than in the inland waterway industry, where investor groups have built barges and towboats without any realistic expectation of operating that equipment for profit. In fact, for tax purposes, profits many well be the last thing that many of those people have had in mind. Backed by MarAd-approved title XI guarantees, these vessels have contributed substantially to the overtonnaging in the industry, with the predictable result that much equipment owned by bona fide operators has been laid up idle or forced to compete for cargoes at less-than-profitable rates. Those conditions, in turn, have contributed to the demise or near-demise of many legitimate operators.

This bill will help halt this practice of providing financing guarantees with minimal regard for the realistic business prospects of a vessel and the effect which its insertion into a trade might have on already established legitimate operators. Modeled closely after provisions in a proposed rule issued by MarAd in August 1983, the bill requires the Secretary of Transportation to take into account certain economic criteria in deciding whether to approve a title XI application, including the extent to which construction or reconstruction of a vessel may contribute to overtonnaging, and the real-world likelihood that the vessel will provide a positive economic return. These criteria are to form the basis of application reviews for all segments of the commercial, nonfishing fleet.

It is not intended that the new language change in any way the procedural means by which MarAd administers the title XI program. By specifying that no commitment to guarantee, or guarantee of, an obligation shall be made without first conducting an economic evaluation based upon those criteria, it is expected that only one such evaluation would be required: prior to MarAd's issuance of a letter of commitment—which is the current practice; or, in the exceptional circumstance, prior to the formal approval of the actual guarantee, where a prior letter of commitment has not been issued. This is also consistent with current title XI program procedures.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5833 meets some of the most pressing needs in the administration of the title XI program, and I urge the Members to adopt it.

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 authorizes the Secretary of Transportation and the Secretary of Commerce to guarantee obligations to aid in financing the construction or reconstruction of vessels or facilities designed principally for research, or for use in connection with the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States. The Government insures full payment to the lender of the unpaid principal and interest of the mortgage or obligation in the event the vessel or facility owner defaults.

H.R. 5833 amends the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 to allow the Secretaries of Transportation and Commerce to assume a title XI guaranteed loan when an obligor defaults. Current law requires the Secretary to pay off all outstanding principal and interest after a default and within 30 days of an obligee's demand. This bill will relieve the financial burden on the title XI fund and give the Secretary time to make arrangements to deal with the default.

The title XI fund has been self-supporting since its creation. However, recently, because of the serious economic downturn in the maritime and fishing industries, there has been a serious strain on the fund. This bill will ease the immediate pressure on the fund since the Secretaries will not have to tender all the outstanding debt but will merely step into the shoes of the debtor until arrangements can be made for assumption by a new obligor or sale of the property.

The bill also requires the Secretary of Transportation to determine—before a loan guarantee is approved—that the vessel for which the application is made will not contribute to an existing overtonnaging in a particular trade and that there are legitimate business prospects in store for the vessel. These stricter criteria are almost identical to requirements contained in a proposed rule issued by the Department of Transportation.

This legislation would improve the administration of the title XI program. The administration supports it. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported it by unanimous voice vote. I urge favorable action by the House today.●

Mr. SNYDER. I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5833, as amended.

The questions was taken, and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5833, as amended, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Administrator shall have no authority under this paragraph to review the issue of whether an airman violated any State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance. Before issuing an order revoking a certificate under this paragraph, the Administrator shall provide the holder of such certificate with notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record. The person whose certificate is revoked by the Administrator's order may obtain judicial review of such order under the provisions of section 1006.

"(2) The Administrator shall issue an order revoking the airman certificates of any person if the Administrator determines that (A) such person has knowingly engaged in an activity which is prohibited by any State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than any law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance), (B) an aircraft was used in carrying out such activity, and (C) such person served as an airman in connection with such activity or was on board the aircraft in connection with such activity. The person whose certificate is revoked by the Administrator's order may obtain judicial review of such order under the provisions of section 1006.

"(B) The Administrator may issue an airman certificate to any such person before the end of such five-year period (but not before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date of such revocation) if, in addition to the findings required by paragraph (1), the Administrator determines (i) that revocation of the certificate for such five-year period would be excessive considering the nature of the offense or the act committed and the burden which revocation places on such person, or (ii) that revocation of the certificate for such five-year period would not be in the public interest. The determinations under clauses (i) and (ii) of the preceding sentence shall be within the discretion of the Administrator and any such determination or failure to make such a determination shall not be subject to administrative or judicial review.

"(C) In any case in which the Administrator has revoked the airman certificates of a person under section 609(c)(2) as a result of any activity and such person is subsequently acquitted of all charges contained in an indictment or information which relate to controlled substances and which arise from such activity, the Administrator shall issue an airman certificate to such person if such person is otherwise qualified to serve as an airman under this section.".

Any person whose certificate is revoked under this paragraph may obtain judicial review of such order under the provisions of section 1006. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1580, a bill which can make an important contribution to our fight against illegal drugs.

The bill is designed to combat the use of aviation in drug trafficking. A large portion of the illegal drugs entering this country do so by air. Intelligence estimates presented at our hearing indicated that 77 percent of cocaine entering the country does so by air; 41 percent by private aircraft, and 35 percent by commercial aircraft. Additionally, 60 percent of heroin from Southeast Asia and 53 percent of heroin from Southwest Asia enter the United States by air, primarily by commercial aviation. Overall, it is estimated that 1.3 million pounds of illegal drugs entered the United States by private aircraft in 1983.

This legislation before us focuses on increasing the aviation-related penalties against aircraft owners and airmen who participate in drug trafficking.

We are concerned with these illegal activities for two reasons. First and most obviously, we are concerned with the social and economic problems created by illegal drugs. There are also more specific, aviation-related concerns. Drug smuggling flights create safety problems because of the hazardous maneuvers pilots undertake to avoid detection, such as operating without a flight plan and flying at extremely low altitudes. It is estimated that between 1980 and 1982 there were 491 accidents involving aircraft suspected of carrying drugs. In addition, many aircraft used in drug smuggling are stolen from innocent owners. Between 1980 and 1982 an estimated 180 aircraft were involved in drug-related thefts.

H.R. 1580 substantially increased the aviation-related penalties against airmen and aircraft owners who participate in drug trafficking. Under current law, there are relatively minimal sanctions against aviation licenses, such as a $1,000 civil penalty or suspension of a pilot's license for a year. H.R. 1580 establishes a 5-year revocation of airman licenses and aircraft certificates of registration if there is knowing use of an aircraft in drug trafficking.

The bill also establishes criminal penalties of 5 years imprisonment and a fine of up to $25,000 for persons without airman certificates who operate aircraft in drug trafficking and for persons who sell or use fraudulent aviation licenses or aircraft registration markings in connection with drug trafficking.

H.R. 1580 contains full protection for the rights of airmen and aircraft owners. Before sanctions can be imposed FAA must hold an evidentiary hearing, and FAA's decision is subject to judicial review.

It should be emphasized that the bill is not intended to place the primary responsibilities for enforcing the drug laws in FAA. Rather, the drug enforcement agencies, such as Customs and DEA, will continue to have that mandate. However, we do feel that we have a responsibility to ensure that FAA's existing responsibilities to certificate airmen and aircraft are capable of making an important contribution toward our national effort to reduce illegal drug trafficking and to protect innocent airmen from threats to themselves and their aircraft.

In sum, I believe that H.R. 1580 can make a substantial contribution in the war against illegal drugs. I urge passage of this important legislation.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I yield to the distinguished ranking minority member of the full Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1580 is designed to complement the many State and Federal criminal laws relating to illegal drug trafficking by imposing more stringent penalties on airmen and other individuals who use airplanes in conducting these illicit activities.

I know that my colleagues are very well aware of the magnitude of the illegal drug problem in this country and I firmly believe that this bill will assist the various Federal agencies in combating this serious problem. According to the Federal Aviation Administration, between 1980 and 1982, 65 individuals had their airman certificates suspended or revoked for drug-related offenses and nearly 300 aircraft were stolen for drug-related reasons. Moreover, illegal drug trafficking also presents serious safety hazards to the public, since those who operate aircraft while engaging in this activity resort to a variety of dangerous tactics to avoid being detected. Along these lines, it has been estimated that nearly 500 accidents occurred between 1980 and 1982 involving aircraft which were suspected of carrying illegal drugs.

The primary intent of the bill is to require, in most cases, a mandatory 5-year revocation of airman and aircraft registration certificates held by those who are convicted or otherwise determined by the Administrator to have used aircraft while violating State or Federal drug laws.

Under existing law, an individual who has committed a drug-related offense is only subject to a 1-year period of revocation before he is eligible to reapply for another certificate. Before revocation of a certificate can occur, however, the Administration must provide the accused airman with an opportunity for a hearing—unless an emergency exists and safety in air commerce requires the revocation to be effective immediately. In such case, a hearing must be held within 60 days, the same time period which applies to all other emergency certificate actions sought by the Administrator.

Another important feature of the bill would preclude the Administrator from revoking an airman's certificate if the individual has been acquitted of all pending criminal charges. Moreover, if the certificate has been revoked prior to such an acquittal, the Administrator is required to reissue the certificate.

In addition to these provisions, the bill also increases the existing criminal penalties against those who knowingly make, use or sell fraudulent FAA certificates with the intention of violating the drug laws by imposing prison terms of up to 5 years and fines of up to $25,000. Similar penalties are also provided for those who act as airmen while transporting controlled substances without a valid airman's certificate.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that this legislation will not only assist in this country's fight against illegal drug trafficking, but will hopefully convince airmen that they not only risk substantial fines and jail terms, but their flying careers as well if they are apprehended while engaging in this activity.

For the foregoing reasons, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1580.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1580, the Aviation Drug-Trafficking Control Act, and urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

We are all aware of the serious problems caused by the flow of illegal drugs into this country. What should also be of concern is the extent to which private and commercial aircraft are involved in this illegal trafficking.

At our subcommittee hearings, it was revealed that 77 percent of the cocaine entering this country does so by air; 41 percent by private aircraft, and 35 percent by commercial aircraft, and that more than half of the heroin from Asia enters the United States by air, primarily by commercial aircraft.

Action is needed to stem the flow and this bill addresses that need by strengthening the existing authority of the Federal Government to deal with aviation-related aspects of drug smuggling.

Under the provisions of H.R. 1580—

Revocation of one's airman certificate would be mandatory if the person was convicted of or knowingly engaged in a drug-related offense and was either acting as an airman or on board the aircraft in connection with the violation. The revocation could be for as long as 5 years.

A person who knowingly and willfully operated without an airman's certificate in connection with violations of drug trafficking laws would be subject to a $25,000 fine and imprisonment for up to 5 years.

An aircraft owner who knowingly permitted an aircraft to be used for illegal drug transactions would have his certificate of registration revoked for at least 1 and possibly as long as 5 years. This revocation would apply to all the aircraft owned by this person.

The sale of fraudulent certificates and the possession of such certificates with the intent to use them would itself be a criminal violation, and if the violation occurred in connection with illegal drug trafficking, the penalty would be a fine of up to $25,000 and imprisonment for up to 5 years.

Use of fraudulent certificates or fraudulent registration markings on aircraft in connection with an illegal drug transaction would make the perpetrator subject to a fine of up to $25,000 and imprisonment for up to 5 years.

Naturally, all of these penalties would be in addition to those that drug smugglers would be subject to under existing criminal law. I would also like to point out that these tougher Administrative sanctions would be imposed without violating the airman's procedural rights.

This bill provides that an airman must receive an evidentiary hearing before revocation of his certificate can occur. This applies in all but emergency circumstances, in which case a hearing must be held within 60 days after the revocation.

Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the existing aviation penalties for drug smuggling are not sufficient. For example, persons involved in illegal drug trafficking are now subject to loss of their license for only 1 year. Suspension or revocation of an airman certificate is not mandatory, but is at the discretion of the FAA. If they should continue to operate after their license is suspended, they would still be subject only to a $1,000 fine.

Existing law is also deficient with respect to those who knowingly permit their aircraft to be used for illegal drug operations. Currently, there are no specific provisions authorizing revocation of an aircraft registration certificate in such situations.

In addition, there are no provisions in current law making the selling of fraudulent certificates, or the possession of such certificates with the intent to use them, an offense. And one who does actually use a fraudulent certificate is subject to a fine of only $1,000 and imprisonment of up to 3 years.

Accordingly, H.R. 1580 would address all of these shortcomings in current law by increasing penalties against owners of aircraft and airmen involved in drug trafficking.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to emphasize that during hearings on this legislation, H.R. 1580 received widespread support from the Drug Enforcement Administration [DEA], the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA], and the U.S. Customs Service. Many others have also called for the sort of tough measures that this bill would adopt.

I think all of my colleagues would agree that H.R. 1580 will act as a credible deterrent to those who are illegally enriching themselves with minimal risk to either their airman certificate or their certificate of registration. It will send a clear message to narcotic source countries that the United States is serious about controlling illegal drug trafficking into this country.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my very fine colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I thank the chairman for yielding, and I want to say that I support him and I support this legislation.

The urgency of the nationwide drug problem compels this body to take substantive action to deter the influx of drugs to this country.

This legislation, increasing aviation penalties against pilots who participate in illegal drug trafficking, will serve as an important reminder that drug smuggling will not be tolerated.

According to a congressional committee investigating the problem, half of the cocaine smuggled into the country is transported by private aircraft. The current aviation laws contain no specific provisions to deal with those who operate aircraft for illegal drug transactions. We must put private aircraft owners and pilots on notice that penalties will be imposed on those who knowingly permit their aircraft to be used for drug transactions, or who create fraudulent licenses to operate aircraft for the use of illegal drug transport.

I appreciate the significance of this bill in curbing the flow of illegal drugs to my own State of Florida and to our Nation. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control I rise in support of H.R. 1580. I salute Chairman MINETA for the fine work he has done on this legislation and I am pleased to note I am joined by nine other members of the select committee in cosponsoring this bill. The importance of the passage of the Aviation Drug Trafficking Control Act, H.R. 1580, cannot be understated. As I stated before the Aviation Subcommittee, Committee on Public Works and Transportation, last year, this bill, if enacted, would greatly enhance our ability to curtail narcotics smuggling by building upon the existing regulatory jurisdiction of the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] for dealing with drug-related aviation violations. This would be accomplished without creating new jurisdictions for the FAA to enforce. Moreover, the Congressional Budget Office has asserted that enaction of this legislation would create no significant additional costs. This bill recognizes the existing problems that are created by overlapping criminal jurisdictions, especially with regard to drug enforcement, and essentially allows the FAA to assist the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Customs Service by denying the privilege of flying and operating aircraft to those engaged in narcotics trafficking.

Statistics gathered over a number of years demonstrate the severity of the aviation drug trafficking problem. The Customs Service estimates that 41 percent of all cocaine, a drug whose use is experiencing an alarming growth, comes across our borders by private aircraft. At present this 41 percent alone represents $13 billion in street value. Additionally, in 1983, approximately 1.3 million pounds of illegal drugs entered the United States by private aircraft. Further, the incidence of this method of smuggling, once limited to the gulf and southern borders, is appearing in rapid frequency at all of our border crossings.

The need for new legislation such as the bill before us today becomes apparent upon examination of the present sanctions available to the FAA under Federal law. The huge profits garnered by drug trade must be met with more than a slap on the wrist if we are to provide a sufficient disincentive to would-be air smugglers. Current law includes no specific provisions dealing with airmen who operate aircraft in connection with illegal drug transactions. An airman who presently operates a civil aircraft with the knowledge that narcotics and illegal drugs are being carried in the aircraft usually becomes ineligible for any certificate or rating issued by the FAA for a period of only 1 year. This bill provides that if convicted of a drug-related aviation offense the revocation period may be as long as 5 years, depending on the Administrator's assessment of excessive burden or national interest, and not less than 1 year. Similarly, a certificate may be revoked for up to 5 years if the Administrator determines that the aviator served as an airman in violation of the narcotic laws whether or not there is a conviction. To protect the airman's procedural rights, before license revocation the airman must receive an evidentiary hearing, and standard judicial review procedures are also made available.

To help ensure that those whose license has been revoked stay on the ground—the bill creates a new violation. Any person who knowingly acts as an airman without a certificate in connection with a violation of Federal- or State-controlled substance laws will be subject to a 5-year prison sentence and a $25,000 fine. Present law only provides a penalty of $1,000 for operating an aircraft without an airman's certificate.

H.R. 1580 also extends the period of time an aircraft's registration can be revoked, up to 5 years, if its owners permit it to transport controlled substances illegally. This aspect of the bill has far reaching positive effects. Drug trafficking flights create safety problems because of the hazardous maneuvers smuggler-pilots must undertake to avoid detection; 491 accidents have been attributed to unsafe flying by air drug smugglers alone between 1981 and 1982. Passage of H.R. 1580 will go far in addressing this growing problem.

Mr. Speaker, both the strict enforcement of our laws and introduction of additional sanctions for drug trafficking offenses sends a clear signal to those countries who export illegal drugs to the United States that we are indeed serious about drug trafficking and dedicated to the elimination of drug abuse. Such a message must constantly be reinforced if we are to be successful in obtaining the cooperation of narcotics source and smuggling nations in conquering drug trafficking.

H.R. 1580 is a mechanism to deter illegal drug smuggling and make the skies safer for legitimate aviation. This is achieved with virtually no new costs and guarantees due process protection to those whose flying certificates are placed in jeopardy. It is for these reasons that I urge quick passage of this bill.●

● Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to suport H.R. 1580, which I cosponsor, and which would crack down on aviation drug trafficking. I introduced similar legislation for the past 2 years when the Federal Aviation Administration indicated it did not have the statutory authority to effectively put a stop to pilots and aircraft owners who were using airplanes to smuggle drugs across our borders.

According to the Drug Enforcement Agency estimates, 50 percent of the cocaine, 35 percent of the marijuana, 75 percent of Southwest Asian heroin and 80 percent of the dangerous drugs entering the United States in 1981 are smuggled by air. The Custom Service estimates that 1.3 million pounds of drugs will enter the country by private aircraft this year. Despite the seriousness of this problem, the FAA under current law has only been able to revoke for 1 year the certificate of an airman who is convicted of a drug violation involving use of an aircraft. In addition, an airman who flies without a license is subject only to a $1,000 civil penalty. This is certainly not a significant deterrent to those willing to violate our drug laws. It is clear that more stringent penalties are needed to combat this threat.

This legislation substantially increased the penalties for airmen who participate in drug trafficking by requiring the revocation of an airman's certificate for 5 years if the holder is convicted of violating any law relating to controlled substances—other than a law relating to simple possession—and the FAA Administrator determines that the certificate holder knowingly served as an airman in connection with the violation. The legislation would also increase the fine for airmen flying without a license in drug violations to $25,000 or imprisonment of up to 5 years, or both.

Many important efforts are being made by Congress to halt the difficult problems associated with illict drugs. I am convinced that the provisions contained in this legislation are excellent weapons for continuing the battle against bigtime drug smugglers. We must do everything we can to stop this poisonous injection of illicit drugs into our country and I urge the House to adopt this needed legislation.●

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1580, the Aviation Drug Trafficking Control Act. This legislation will be an important weapon in our Government's effort to slow the smuggling of illegal drugs into this country.

This bill imposes increased penalties on pilots and aircraft owners who engage in drug smuggling. These penalties will be beyond those already imposed by State and Federal drug laws. The Federal agencies responsible for enforcing the Nation's drug laws testified before the committee that aircraft and pilots play a very significant role in illegal drug smuggling. With these changes in Federal aviation laws, we will strike at that crucial link in the drug smuggling chain.

This bill, by imposing aviation penalties for drug smuggling, will substantially curtail the ability of pilots and aircraft owners convicted of drug smuggling to participate in any aviation activity, legitimate or illegitimate. There is no doubt that the penalties of certificate and registration revocation will discourage many people from getting into the business of smuggling drugs. With these new penalties it will also be more difficult for smugglers to obtain aircraft under legitimate auspices for illegal activity. In short, we will be upsetting a major component of the drug smuggling infrastructure, thereby making it more difficult for the smuggler to operate.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation we bring to the floor today is necessary legislation that enjoys wide support among law and drug enforcement officials. I urge my colleagues to adopt this measure.●

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1580, the Aviation Drug Trafficking Control Act, and urge my colleagues to join me in supporting enactment of this important legislation.

The use of aircraft to smuggle illicit narcotics into this country is reaching epidemic proportions. Recent estimates by the U.S. Customs Service reveal that as much as 41 percent of all cocaine smuggled into the United States comes in through private aircraft. In all 1.3 million pounds of illegal drugs entered the U.S. by private aircraft. The incidence of this type of smuggling is showing dramatic increases at all border crossings.

While the Federal Aviation Administration currently has regulatory authority to deal with drug-related aviation violations, the magnitude of the current problem clearly indicates that increased authority is essential if we are to bring the problem under control. Any increased authority given to the FAA would also provide much needed assistance to the Drug Enforcement Administration [DEA], the Coast Guard, and the Customs Service in these tasks of restricting the inflow of illicit narcotics to our shores.

I am firmly convinced that those who knowingly own and operate aircraft to smuggle drugs to our shores should be more severely dealt with than they are under current law. At the present time the FAA has the authority to revoke a certificate of aircraft registration if the Administrator finds a "cause which renders the aircraft ineligible for registration." H.R. 1580 provides that a certificate of registration must be revoked if the Administrator determines that the owner has knowingly permitted the aircraft to be use to transport a controlled substance. More importantly H.R. 1580 would also require revocation of an airman's certificate if the holder is convicted for violation of any State or Federal law relating to the Controlled Substance Act and the FAA Administrator determines either that the certificate holder knowingly served as an airman or was on board the aircraft in connection with the violation. The period for revocation may be as long as 5 years, and not less than 1 year. In addition, the certificate may be revoked for up to 5 years if the Administrator determines that narcotic laws were violated regardless of whether or not there is a conviction.

Finally, the bill ensures that those who have their licenses revoked stay on the ground by requiring that any pilot who knowingly transports drugs by air without a certificate in violation of Federal or State controlled substances laws can be subject to a 5-year prison sentence and a $25,000 fine.

Mr. Speaker, we can no longer allow the growing problem to go uncorrected, and the Public Works and Transportation Subcommittee on Aviation, under the leadership of Chairman NORMAN MINETA, are to be congratulated for their efforts. Drug trafficking and abuse in this Nation is at epidemic proportions. It is the responsibility of Congress to take effective steps to halt the flood of drugs to our shores and protect the health and well-being of our citizens and our youth. The legislation before us is indicative that this Congress is not going to stand by and watch the scourge of drug trafficking and abuse run wild. It demonstrates our determination to toughen existing laws, punishing those who seek to reap the profits of illicit drugs, while at the same time making the skies safer for legitimate aviation. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support passage of this important measure.●

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1580, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

"(2) knowingly accesses a computer without authorization, or having accessed a computer with authorization, uses the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such authorization does not extend, and by means of such conduct obtains information that has been determined by the United States Government pursuant to an Executive order or statute to require protection against unauthorized disclosure for reasons of national defense or foreign relations, or any restricted data, as defined in paragraph r. of section 11 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, with the intent or reason to believe that such information so obtained is to be used to the injury of the United States, or to the advantage of any foreign nation; shall be punished as provided in subsection (c) of this section. It is not an offense under paragraph (4) or (5) of this subsection in the case of a person having accessed a computer with authorization and using the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such access does not extend, if the using of such opportunity consists only of the use of the computer.

"(B) a fine of not more than the greater of $10,000 or twice the value obtained or loss created by the offense or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both, in the case of an offense under subsection (a)(3), (a)(4), or (a)(5) of this section which occurs after a conviction for another offense under such subsection, or an attempt to commit an offense punishable under this subparagraph.

"(d) The United States Secret Service shall, in addition to any other agency having such authority, have the authority to investigate offenses under this section. Such authority of the United States Secret Service shall be exercised in accordance with an agreement which shall be entered into the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General.

SEC. 3. The Attorney General shall report to the Congress annually, during the first three years following the date of the enactment of this Act, concerning prosecutions under the sections of title 18 of the United States Code added by this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on September 29 and November 10, 1983, and March 28, 1984, the Subcommittee on Crime held hearings on the general issues of credit card and computer fraud and abuse. Generally these hearings documented that our society is increasingly becoming dependent on numerous credit cards and other plastic devices, all of which eventually involve use of computers and other electronic devices which also are subject to criminal attack. For example, there are indications of a growing problem in counterfeit credit cards and unauthorized use of account numbers of access codes to banking system accounts called debit instruments. Financial institutions claim that they lost $128 million from bank card fraud in 1982—an increase of 35 percent over 1981 losses. They further estimate that $40 million of this figure was just from counterfeit credit cards which was a 500-percent increase since 1980. There are also indications that thieves are becoming increasingly sophisticated and in fact are stealing account numbers and using them without even getting physical control of the cards themselves.

As the credit industry and other parts of our society enlarges its capacity in the use of computer technology, for example, in the use of "smart cards" which contain microchips and are themselves a form of "passive" computer, there is every indication that the criminal element is enlarging its capacity in this area also.

One aspect of this new criminal conduct which has received much media attention lately has been the activities of some so-called "hackers" who have been able to access both private and public computer systems without authorization, sometimes with potentially serious results. The relative ease of access by the hacker is due to a corresponding proliferation of computer networking which began during the 1970's. This phenomenon which is predominantly interstate in nature was described in our hearings and brings a new dimension to computer crime. Since the computer industry is itself expanding to the point where it is projected that some 80 million home computers will be in existence by 1990 as compared with 5,000 in 1978, it seems clear that the Congress must not only bring our laws up to date in the credit area, but also give serious consideration to deterring the criminal element from abusing computer technology in future frauds. H.R. 5616 is an attempt to stem the tide of illegal activity in these distinct but interrelated areas.

WHAT H.R. 5616 DOES

In the credit card area H.R. 5616 prohibits use, production and trafficking in counterfeit access devices and device-making equipment with a substantial punishment of up to 15 years in prison and fines up to twice the value obtained.

It also prohibits use and trafficking in unauthorized access devices which are valid cards that have been lost, stolen, and so forth, if the defendant obtains $1,000 in value in a year or possesses 15 or more unauthorized or counterfeit access devices. These offenses can be punished with up to 10 years in prison and fines of up to twice the value obtained. Repeat offenses in any of these violations call for a substantial increase in maximum prison sentences—20 years—and substantial fines.

In the computer area the bill establishes a specific Federal felony for unauthorized access to computers if the defendant aggregates $5,000 in illegal gains in 1 year—other than from just the use—or the defendant accesses information requiring protection against unauthorized disclosure for reasons of national defense or foreign relations. These offenses can be punished with up to 10 years in prison and fines up to twice the value obtained. Repeat offenses of either of these violations call for a substantial increase in maximum prison sentences, 20 years, and substantial fines.

The bill also creates three misdemeanor crimes of computer abuse. The first involves unauthorized access to information in a computer protected by the Right to Financial Privacy Act or the Fair Credit Reporting Act; the second proscribes the unauthorized access to a computer if there is a gain to the defendant or loss to others that aggregate $5,000 or more in value during a 1-year period and such activity affects interstate or foreign commerce; and third, if the defendant uses, modifies, or discloses information in or prevents authorized use of a computer owned or operated for the U.S. Government regardless of loss or gain. These misdemeanor offenses can be punished with up to 1 year in prison and fines of $5,000 or up to twice the value obtained or loss created by the offense. Repeat offenses of any of these violations call for a substantial increase in maximum prison sentences, 10 years, and substantial fines.

There is hardly a week that goes by when some new incidence of computer fraud is not revealed. Last week it involved access to NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center. Just prior to that there were reports of massive intrusion into TRW's credit histories.

Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Committee has worked with experts in the credit and computer crime areas, and we believe this legislation combined with active efforts of industry to safeguard property will address the emergence of this new type of criminal in our society.

Protection both through law and technology can and must be developed to protect against these new forms of credit card and computer fraud. I believe H.R. 5616 is a responsible approach to Federal legislation in these areas.

Mr. Speaker, the Subcommittee on Crime has had immeasureable help over the last several months that we have been working on credit card fraud and computer crime legislation, and at the top of the list would have to be the ranking minority member, the ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Crime, HAL SAWYER. The gentleman has been very actively involved in this area of legislation as well as others affecting the criminal justice system, and I want to thank him for his great work in crafting H.R. 5616.

I also want to mention a colleague of mine from Florida, BILL NELSON, who worked on computer crime legislation when he was a member of the Florida State legislature. It was BILL NELSON'S work that helped craft one of the strongest computer crime bills passed in the Nation. We thank him for his great work.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Mr. HUGHES, the gentleman from New Jersey, in support of H.R. 5616 today. As consumers have grown to rely on the credit card system and credit cards, so too has grown the creativity of the criminal mind with a profit motive. The sharp criminal no longer needs to hold up a bank or snatch a purse; all he has to do is recite a set of phony credit card numbers on the telephone.

Even more alarming, a simple survey of existing law reveals that many of these activities are not in violation of any Federal law. For example, an individual criminal can counterfeit 50 credit cards at a time and not commit a Federal crime. Consumers pay for this; credit card users bear the cost. The result is the same as if cash were stolen, and I believe the same punishment should also exist.

Credit purchases are a reality upon which our society is dependent, and the cost of credit cards should not include the profits of the credit card con artists. Credit card fraud is no less than stealing and is an inexcusable, profit-motivated, modern-day scam. Flim-flammers at the front of these schemes are sophisticated bankers and they deserve a swift and efficient punishment which will both deter these activities and take the profit out of the crime. This bill addresses these aims and I believe accomplishes them.

This bill also addresses the serious problem of computer crime. As our society grows increasingly dependent upon the computer, it also becomes vulnerable to the equally innovative growth of the computer crime, and even the so-called hackers who are not in for the profit motive but in it just for the devil of it, one might say.

While this may sound amusing, just a recent occasion that came to our attention during the hearings, the Drake University of Iowa had its computer system entered by a group of hackers using telephones. They plowed through the computer at great length. It contained reams and reams of research material being done at the university for many serious objective purposes, as well, of course, as the grade records and everything else of all of its student body. As a result of this, it had to be gone through item by item and rechecked to confirm that various things had not been changed which could have caused great damage had they been put to use in a changed form. This cost the university millions of dollars to do.

So while it may look like a youthful prank, it certainly far exceeds any youthful vandalism we have been used to in the past.

I submit that this invasion of private records via computers is no less an invasion than the invasion of a household or the going through of our own bank statements by some unauthorized person. While we have provided stiff penalties for actual use for theft or going into classified material, because there is much of that on Government computers, we have also provided for dealing with these so-called hackers when they engage in this kind of conduct.

For these reasons, I support H.R. 5616, Mr. Speaker, and I would also like to commend the gentleman from New York, HAMILTON FISH, JR., who has been at the forefront of the credit card fraud problem. His work in this area has been extremely helpful to the committee and is the impetus for much of the bill before us today.

I would also like to compliment Hayden Gregory and Ed O'Connell of the majority legal staff of the committee for their work, and Charlene Vanlier, my own minority counsel on the committee, who basically are the people who technically crafted and put this bill together and researched its background. I commend them, and I know the chairman feels the same way about it.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAWYER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to commend the minority ranking member and the chairman of the subcommittee for a job well done.

It struck me that an important facet of what you have been able to produce here is that in monkeying around with computers, as some people are wont to do, that it can become a national security problem as well as a problem in the commercial world. So what has been done here is to take a solid step forward in solidifying our capabilities of fighting those who would intrude with that part of the computer world that deals specifically and directly with the national security.

So it is a twofold weapon that has been crafted here and I commend the subcommittee for producing the bill.

Mr. SAWYER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, there is new kind of criminal that is lurking in the shadows of criminal activity. He is a highly sophisticated criminal. He is a high-technology criminal, and he is one who, when faced by the Nation's prosecutors, often find they do not have the adequate tools to prosecute. The Federal law books need a criminal law that will allow our U.S. attorneys to specifically go after this new type of criminal activity, computer crime.

As computers become ubiquitous in our society, we will hear more and more about this type of crime.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today in support of H.R. 5616, the Counterfeit Access Device and Computer Fraud and Abuse Act.

As the original sponsor of computer crime legislation in this body, I have worked for the past 5 years to bring this important issue to the Nation's attention, and today H.R. 5616 includes some of the provisions of the Federal Computer Systems Protection Act, H.R. 1092, which I sponsored. I congratulate Chairman HUGHES for his extraordinary efforts in this regard, and his ranking member, Mr. SAWYER.

It has been a privilege to work closely with Chairman HUGHES and his staff to develop this legislation which affords warranted protection of our Nation's computer systems.

H.R. 5616 combines significant penalties for computer crime and credit card abuse, new kinds of crimes that have come with the country's technological transformation. We must put on notice those who would be tempted to use these high-tech instruments for fraudulent purposes or to steal valuable economic or national security information.

I believe a Federal law advancing the principle that violating the integrity of computer systems essential to the Federal Government and to the national economy is wrong, and that persons doing so will be presecuted, will serve as a tremendous deterrent to this type of activity.

Daily newspaper headlines chronicle the rising numbers of computer crime. Just recently, the computers at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center were illegally tapped—destroying valuable computer records.

The TRW computer break-in about 3 weeks ago involved hackers' access to one of the largest confidential data files in the world holding credit histories of 90 million people.

Not too long ago we had the case of a former Federal Reserve Board employee who, upon leaving the employ of the Reserve, employed by a brokerage house in New York, stole a password and tapped into confidential computer files containing sensitive information on the Nation's money supply.

The 414's, a group of teenage hackers in Milwaukee, made incursions into more than 50 business and institutional computers. Among them was the Los Alamos nuclear weapons laboratory.

And last year in my own State of Florida, a health insurance claims agent generated more than $240,000 in fraudulent claims to herself and family members. That case was successfully prosecuted under the comprehensive computer crime law that I sponsored as a State legislator in 1978.

Since we passed the Florida law, over 20 other States have followed suit in adding varying degrees of computer crime laws to the State criminal codes.

But, the fact remains that we must enact legislation to defend our Federal Government computers from unauthorized entry and abuse. We must protect the developing banking by electronic funds transfer system and preserve the integrity of the Federal Reserve System. And we must safeguard business computers in a world where a terminal may be on every desk in every home.

Computer crime is sophisticated bank robbery, trespass, and burglary. It is serious and the losses caused by it are already reaching into the pocketbooks of the country's consumers. Familiarity with computers is becoming common experience of tens of millions of working Americans. But where people work daily with a powerful tool such as a computer, there will be those who overstep the boundaries between legitimate and criminal uses of these high-technology devices.

It is my hope that we will pass this bill today to stand the test of time even in an industry that is advancing and changing everyday.

I urge your support of H.R. 5616.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER], a member of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, let me say first that I want to welcome the gentleman back to the House. As we all know, JIM had a very narrow escape from a very serious house fire and sustained some considerable injuries. This is his first day back, and I am just delighted to see him here.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I deeply appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER]. As the gentleman knows, I had to jump out of a second-story window of my burning house in order to save my life. There are some who have suggested that I jump out a window quite often, but that is not something I would recommend to anyone.

Mr. Speaker, the information age is upon us. This country is entering a new lifestyle that incorporates great benefits from technology. As we develop reliance upon this new technology, we must also face the inevitable misuse of our advances by the criminal mind.

The computer crime criminal and the credit card counterfeiter are highly sophisticated and intelligent white-collar criminals. They pose a great threat to all people of this Nation. The economic harm caused by these criminals is ultimately paid by all consumers.

The annual loss to the banking community through credit card fraud is far in excess of the proceeds in bank robberies. In 1982, $46.8 million was stolen in bank robberies. By comparison, over $128 million was stolen from banks through credit card fraud in 1982. This increase is appalling and we must rely on our Federal resources to help reduce this trend.

An ambitious and hard working fraud user can use a single card to make $10,000 in fraud transactions. On the black market, these cards can be purchased illicitly for about $200. As long as this highly profitable criminal enterprise exists with little or no risk of stiff criminal penalties, we can be assured of this continuing economic harm to all consumers.

H.R. 5616 provides Federal law enforcement officers with the tools necessary to combat credit card and computer fraud. This bill goes to the heart of these unacceptable practices by squarely addressing computer fraud and credit card fraud with stiff criminal sentences and fines. I believe it is incumbent upon us to recognize and respond to the liabilities of the information age. Our society will gain from this new technology only when we work diligently to prevent its abuses by the criminal mind.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, now that we have heard from the "second-story man," I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and its distinguished ranking minority member for bringing this legislation to the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5616 which is similar to a bill I introduced to establish a Federal penalty for computer crime.

The ever-growing expansion of computer usage has brought with it its own set of criminal abuses. Computers link and store information of immeasurable worth, vital to our citizenry and national security as well as the economic well-being of our Nation. Tampering with stored data, introducing fradulent records and altering, destroying, or stealing assets or data can now be accomplished with a touch of a button. While Federal and State criminal laws provide a framework for dealing with computer abuse or computer-related crime, I believe a specific statute is warranted which would deal solely with the use of a computer as an instrument of crime.

Over the past few years, we have been confronted repeatedly with the occurrence of computer crime. Countless stories have appeared detailing the activities of individuals who have illegally altered computer records for their own personal gain. A recent American Bar Association survey reported a total loss to computer crime of $730 million in 1 year. The extent of this problem is probably underestimated since many businesses fear that if they reveal cases of fraud they will only encourage others to try—so-called copycat crimes.

Moreover, personal computers and networking by telephones allow almost anyone to gain access to computers containing financial accounts, private information about U.S. citizens, and even national-security secrets. Security measures sometimes prevent offenders from obtaining specific information but often leave programs open to the kind of random destruction that is becoming more prevalent.

Last fall, when I testified before the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights in favor of computer crime law, I urged the panel to report a measure it felt could most effectively deal with curbing computer crime. I commend the subcommittee and the full House Judiciary Committee for providing the House with today's opportunity to vote on such a bill.

I feel it incumbent upon the U.S. Congress to afford our citizens protection against computer crime. Accessing a computer without proper authorization is not a sport. It is a crime and it deserves punishment. A Federal statute dealing specifically with computer crime will serve, in my opinion, as an effective disincentive to those who commit such offenses because of their relative ease.

H.R. 5616 is such a bill. It is designed to ensure that Federal law prohibits and punishes computer fraud. Although I would support an even stronger measure, I urge the Members of the House to vote in favor of its passage.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill, and I compliment very much the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], who has been a great leader in bringing a variety of crime bills to the floor, including this one.

I am pleased to have had a little bit to do with this bill in respect to making it a misdemeanor to basically hack into a person's privacy with respect to financial or credit records. But I would make the point to my colleagues that this only scratches the surface of the problem of the security of computers in this country, whether they be Government computers or private computers. We need a national effort to deal with the issue of protecting information.

With respect to both national security information and financial information and all other sorts of information, we need to have better technological devices on computers to make sure they cannot be broken into in the first place. We need better diligence on the part of operators of computers to make sure they know what they are doing when they feed information in and when they come to changing passwords. A whole assortment of issues is raised by this computer society.

This bill makes a good first start by making it a crime to improperly enter into a computer and to do damage, but with respect to the entire issue of computers in this country, the issue has to be approached from a comprehensive point of view.

Mr. Speaker, I compliment my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], for bringing this very important bill to the floor today.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just say to my colleague, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN], that his contribution was a significant one. I think that his amendment in the full committee strengthened the bill, particularly with regard to protecting the privacy of certain records.

Our Subcommittee on Crime has enacted to date and the President has signed five anticrime measures. We have about eight or nine other crime bills in the works, and I do not think there are any measures that we are working on that will have more of an impact on electronic-age crime as will this particular legislation.

As my colleague, the gentleman from Kansas, has said, this is not the last word. I do think, however, that it is a milestone piece of legislation, particularly in the area of computer crime. It is amazing just how fast this technology is moving and what it takes for us just to stay ahead of those who would abuse the system. All of our criminal statutes are couched in terms of tangible property in terms of trespass as an actual entry. So this new phenomenon of computer trespass is a whole new area of the law that we are going to be wrestling with in the years ahead as the technology evolves.

I do not think that there are any areas that are growing any faster than the area of credit-card use and credit-card fraud, computer use and computer-crime abuse.

This legislation will go a long way in dealing with those that would abuse these new technologies. I would urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5616, the Counterfeit Access Device-Computer Fraud Abuse Act of 1984. It is a good bill.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I join the chairman in urging support for this bill.

I may say, though, we have a similar situation in computer fraud as we do in copyright. We are really carrying forward very ancient doctrines that in copyright were designed primarily for the printed book and printed material and we are trying to work out applications of them for satellite communications and all kinds of electronic transmissions.

We are in the same problem with the computer taking over from entering physical records or trespassing. It has been a very interesting exercise for me in both subcommittees that are dealing with these problems.

I want to congratulate the chairman for doing a very fine job of pushing this.

I might also say that it is a real pleasure being a minority Republican member serving with a chairman such as the gentleman from New Jersey, BILL HUGHES, who has been very, very generous in sharing authority and participation in the committee and the subcommittee in its activities. I want to let the gentleman know how much I have enjoyed that.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAWYER. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I do not want it to sound like a mutual admiration society, but I thank my colleague for those comments. We have been afforded a great opportunity with this prime legislation. I have enjoyed working with my distinguished colleague from Michigan.

My colleague earlier singled out the work of the gentleman from New York, HAMILTON FISH, who has done a great deal of work particularly with regard to credit-card fraud. I want to echo the sentiments of my colleague, because HAM FISH has been of immeasurable help to us. He introduced the first legislation, I might say, dealing with credit-card fraud.

I also want to single out the work of the staff. Hayden Gregory and Charlene Vanlier have been very, very helpful in this, as well as much other legislation that we have dealt with, and Ed O'Connor in particular has done a yeoman's job on this particular bill. Ed has worked on this legislation for over 6 months and has done outstanding work. His contributions are very noteworthy.

Thank you.

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5616 responds to a serious increase in credit-card fraud. Industry statistics show that losses in 1981 and 1982 were nine times as great as the total for the previous 10 years. In 1983, credit-card counterfeiting resulted in losses of approximately $47 million. This staggering price, which is ultimately paid by American consumers, deserves a Federal response.

I am pleased to support H.R. 5616 since it incorporates, in a substantial way, the provisions of my bill, H.R. 3181, which I introduced on June 1, 1983, and which has more than 50 cosponsors. I am pleased that by introducing the first bill ever to address the rapidly escalating problem of credit- and debit-card counterfeiting and fraud, it was possible to prompt the serious examination of this area and the recognition of the need for credit-card-counterfeiting legislation.

H.R. 5616 is the result of the diligent efforts of Mr. HUGHES, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime, Mr. SAWYER, the ranking Republican of the subcommittee, and the other members of the Crime Subcommittee. While I am generally satisfied with the bill in its current form, I continue to have several technical concerns about certain aspects of the bill. Since the other body has addressed these concerns in S. 1870, I urge the consideration of these refinements before we send this measure to the President.

This bill represents a carefully considered effort to deal with the escalating problem of credit- and debit-card counterfeiting and fraud. For that reason, I am pleased to support it, and urge this body to accept this important measure.●

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5616, the Counterfeit Access Device and Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984. In so doing, I would like to first commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime, Mr. HUGHES, and the ranking minority member, Mr. SAWYER, for their thorough and bipartisan approach to these new criminal abuses of high technology. I would also like to mention that the ranking minority member of the full committee, Mr. FISH, contributed greatly to this bill and in fact was one of the first to introduce a bill in the credit-card counterfeiting area. I should at this point note that H.R. 5616 in general deals with credit and computer fraud which can be characterized as white-collar crimes and as such often are neglected both at the Federal and State levels. The committee believes that this neglect is a great mistake and in fact an attack on white-collar crime can often be much more productive, economically, to this country than the more publicized emphasis on violent crime.

The prosecution of this type of crime, which silently robs millions of dollars from all of the taxpayers, a few dollars at a time, we believe, must remain a high priority for Federal law enforcement. It is in this perspective we must deal with credit and computer fraud as we begin an era of a cashless society where currency and even checks are becoming a diminishing part of our everyday life.

H.R. 5616 would make it a felony—up to 15 years in prison and substantial fines—to use, produce, or traffic in counterfeit-access device and device-making equipment. It also prohibits use or trafficking in unauthorized access devices if the defendant obtains $1,000 in value in a year or possesses 15 or more unauthorized or counterfeit-access devices—up to 10 years and substantial fines—if such conduct affects interstate or foreign commerce.

It, for the first time, sets up a specific Federal felony—up to 10 years in prison and fines—for unauthorized access to computers if the defendant aggregates $5,000 in illegal gains in 1 year—other than just this use of the computer—if such conduct affects interstate or foreign commerce or unauthorized access to information requiring protection against unauthorized disclosure for reasons of national defense or foreign relations.

The bill also creates misdemeanor crimes—up to 1 year in prison and substantial fines—for unauthorized access to information in computers protected by the right to Financial Privacy Act (12 U.S.C. 3401) and the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. 1681), and any U.S. Government computer. It also proscribes unauthorized access to any computer if such conduct affects interstate or foreign commerce and if the defendant gains or cause a loss to others that aggregates $5,000 or more in a 1-year period.

In closing, I would like to quote to you some dramatic statistics from a recent "report on computer crime" by a Task Force on Computer Crime of the section on criminal justice of the American Bar Association:

The annual losses incurred as a result of computer crime appear, by any measure, to be enormous. Over 25% (72) of the survey respondents reported "known and verifiable losses due to computer crime during the last 12 months." The total annual losses reported by these respondents fall somewhere between $145 million and $730 million. Thus, the annual losses per respondent reporting losses could be anywhere from $2 million to as high as $10 million. Approximately 28% of the survey respondents reported no available system to monitor or estimate the value of their computer crime losses.

Federal law must keep pace with technology. It is as important today to develop Federal protection for intangible property such as information and high-tech credit transactions as it was to develop Federal law to protect tangible assets in insterstate commerce in the past.●

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

There was no objection.

COMMISSION TO ASSIST IN THE FIRST OBSERVANCE OF THE FEDERAL HOLIDAY HONORING MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5890) to establish a commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr., as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HALL] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. COURTER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HALL].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration, H.R. 5890.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is to create a national commission to prepare for the first national observance of the national birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., who was one of the world's greatest humanitarians. The Commission shall consist of 31 members. There shall be four Members from the U.S. House of Representatives, four Members from the U.S. Senate. The President of the United States shall appoint four members. Mrs. Coretta Scott King, who is the widow of the slain civil rights leader and humanitarian, two immediate family members and one person representing the Martin Luther King Center for Non-violence Social Change and an additional 15 members consisting of persons representing every sector of our society shall make up the bipartisan Commission. The Commission shall have a staff not to exceed five persons and it will have the authority to accept donations for the purpose of financing the necessities that will be involved in preparing for that first observance.

I believe that this is very important legislation, because we know that last year we did adopt legislation to create a national holiday, but a holiday in itself is not enough. We would like to have a meaningful holiday, Mr. Speaker, and we believe that in order to do so, we must have adequate preparation. We do believe that this legislation will allow us to have a commission which is designed to prepare and carry out a fulfilling national holiday on the third Monday of January 1986.

I shall point out to you that this Commission shall exist for 20 months and after that period of time it will be sunsetted.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read the amendments which we would like to have considered today. We have two technical amendments. The first amendment seeks to provide for the Commission to have needed flexibility to hire the staff to operate the Commission for its 20-month duration and exempt it from chapter 51 and subchapter 3 of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and general schedule pay rates.

The second committee amendment clarifies the committee's desire to insure that Commission members, while serving without pay, shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business for the purpose of carrying out the duties and the responsibilities of the Commission.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that we would like to ask the House for its support. We do feel that this is very important legislation and we need the support of the House to get it adopted.

We believe that this legislation will not only give us the holiday, but as I said, it will give us a meaningful holiday, so that the life and work of Martin Luther King, Jr., certainly can be reflected in that first national celebration.

Mr. Speaker, I have several Members who would like to speak on behalf of this bill.

First, Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank my chair for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to have cosponsored H.R. 5890 and an honor to rise in support of this bill to establish the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.

I strongly support this legislation. It is an appropriate means of guaranteeing that the first holiday marking Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday will pay fitting tribute to a person who did more than any other individual in our lifetime to advance the cause of social justice. The legislation also underscores our national commitment to equality, and to the principles for which Dr. King stood.

Mr. Speaker, nearly 1 year ago, we were all blessed to be able to witness an historic event when the Congress enacted and the President signed H.R. 3345 making Dr. King's birthday a Federal holiday. Yet, our challenge goes beyond recognizing his birth. Now we must ensure that the holiday remains true to what Dr. King represented. The Commission will make certain that it does.

Mr. Speaker, no other holiday serves as a focal point for encouraging improved race relations or for unifying the American people in the spirit of Dr. King's dream of mutual understanding and respect among people. It is my hope that our celebrating his birth each year will cause us to reflect upon his life and the just society of which he dreamed—one in which all women and men would be treated with dignity and equality. Dr. King also felt that this ultimately would lead to world peace.

Mr. Speaker, this Commission is necessary if we are to ensure that the King holiday remains a positive and constructive force in the lives of Americans and people all over the world. Furthermore, the passage of H.R. 5890 will encourage private and public organizations to assume a leadership role in the proper observance of Dr. King's birthday in 1986.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay a special tribute to my good colleague from Indiana, Congresswoman KATIE HALL, for her sponsorship, leadership, and enthusiasm for bringing this bill to the floor today. Without her ceaseless efforts on behalf of this bill, the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission would not have been possible. She is to be commended for her foresight and leadership.

None of us was successful until KATIE HALL came to Congress in passing this bill. So we, all of us, owe her, the American people owe KATIE a special tribute today and we will throughout our lifetime for her ceaseless efforts on behalf of the bill for the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission, without whose efforts this particular bill would not have been possible.

I hope that in the future we have enough good wisdom to see KATIE one of the Commissioners. I know my colleague from the other side and I have discussed this in committee. KATIE does not like to see us discuss it publicly, but we really feel that this is something very cherished to her and she would bring forward that kind of feeling and love to the celebration of the Dr. King holiday. It is for that reason that I certainly want to commend my Chair and leader and thank her for all of her good work.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the legislation establishing a commission to commemorate the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, who would be on the first occasion of the public holiday, January 22, 1986, only 57 years of age. We often forget that he indeed during his productive life was a very young man, a person who had a great deal of vision and a great deal of compassion and a great number of accomplishments at a very young age.

We passed legislation commemorating his birthday so that it will take place on his birthday, January 22, 1986. But as was said by the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HALL] we are not going to have a meaningful celebration unless we have a group of enthusiastic supporters forming a commission that will get together to help commemorate such an occasion.

I would emphasize also that this Commission will be functioning using private donations, private money, as Dr. Martin Luther King would have it, I am quite sure, if he could express his own desire. He was an inspiration to millions of Americans while he lived and he remains an inspiration to millions of Americans long after his death.

He was a person who preached freedom, freedom from hatred, freedom from prejudice, freedom from violence. I can remember very well his beautiful statement during the march in Washington, DC, when he spoke so eloquently from the Lincoln Memorial and when he ended up by saying "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty I am free at last."

He was a great American who deserves not only the holiday but a commission to help make it productive, to help make it meaningful, to help make it sacred for millions of Americans for whom he died and for whom he set a magnificent example.

I would like also to parrot the expression of MARY ROSE OAKAR indicating that I personally would love to see the gentlewoman from Indiana, the chairwoman of the subcommittee to be one of those commissioners. She deserves it. This piece of legislation was brought up year after year after year, and it was not until KATIE HALL came to Congress that it actually passed. I think that is a fitting tribute to her measure as a Congresswoman.

As Dr. Martin Luther King's life, Mr. Speaker, cannot be measured by its longevity, he died at a young age, certainly Mrs. HALL's measure of her productivity as a Member of Congress cannot be measured by its longevity. She was here for a short period of time, but by virtue of the passage of this meaningful legislation it was indeed more productive than many of our colleagues who have been here for much longer.

Mr. Speaker, I thus rise in support of H.R. 5890, which would establish a commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, on August 2, 1983, this body passed legislation designating the third Monday in January of each year, beginning in 1986, as a national holiday commemorating the birthday of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Dr. King was a man whose great vision and determination moved an entire country. Dr. King had a dream of equality, equality of rights and opportunity for all people. It was for this dream that Dr. King lived, and it was for this dream that he died.

The holiday will recognize Dr. King for his service and acknowledge not only our debt to this great man but our national acceptance of his dream, a dream of a society free from hatred, free from prejudice, and free from violence, where there is equal opportunity for all Americans.

January 20, 1986, is the 57th anniversary of the birth of Martin Luther King and marks the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring this great man. I feel it is most appropriate for the Federal Government to assist in coordinating efforts with all Americans of diverse backgrounds and with private organizations in the first observance of this Federal legal holiday.

The legislation before us, H.R. 5890, proposes a 31 member commission, to be known as the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission. The Commission will serve to encourage appropriate ceremonies and activities throughout the United States relating to the first observance of the holiday.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out one very important provision in H.R. 5890. The King Commission will not use any Federal funds since all funds for expenditures will be donated by both individuals from the private and public sector. The bill proposed requires a final report from the Commission to the President and the Congress no later than April 10, 1986, at which time the Commission will cease to exist.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HALL] for her leadership on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, seeing no other Members on our side at this particular moment who would like to speak on this legislation, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentlewoman from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, for yielding to me at this point in time. I rise to join her and many of my colleagues in support of H.R. 5890, legislation establishing a commission to assist in the first observance of a historical and appropriate event, the observance of the Martin Luther King, Jr., birthday.

First, before getting into the merits of this particular piece of legislation, like my colleagues who preceded me, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. COURTER] and the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR], I would like to join them in commending our colleague, KATIE HALL, for her leadership; her effective chairing of the committee that reported out the Martin Luther King holiday bill; for her working with many diverse groups; for her ability to calm concerns about the legislation from an economic standpoint; and to impress upon her colleagues in the House of Representatives and in the other body, and in the country the appropriateness of the step that we took, the historic step that we took, and to join also with them in lamenting the fact that she will not be serving us in an elected capacity in the next session of Congress. That is unfortunate for us. It is unfortunate for the country and, in my opinion, it is unfortunate for the people of her district.

KATIE HALL served in the Indiana Senate for 6 years and was there a leader and has here been a leader. KATIE HALL has been my friend and I am pleased to join her in supporting this most appropriate piece of legislation.

In January 1986 we will be celebrating a holiday, the first observance of the Federal holiday in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. It will be the first national recognition of the vision and determination of this great man. And it is right, it is important, it is proper that we encourage ceremonies and activities throughout the United States to mark this important day. Observances which will bring the importance of the life of Martin Luther King and the principles for which he fought to the attention particularly of our young people and also to all of the citizens of this Nation and to people around the world.

H.R. 5890 will establish, as has been said, a commission to provide assistance and advice to both private and public organizations planning events for the King holiday. Because the Commission would receive donations from individuals and public and private organizations, no Federal funds would be required. Yet it would provide an important and needed Federal service.

Twenty-one years ago, Mr. Speaker, Martin Luther King, Jr., led over a half a million people to the Nation's Capital to sound a protest to the injustice that characterized the treatment of blacks in this country, and to offer a challenge and a dream. We have come far in this Nation in righting many of the wrongs of which Dr. King spoke, but there is still, as all of us would observe, and as Dr. King would observe if he were alive today, much that needs to be done.

The observance of this holiday will be a yearly benchmark from which we can measure our actions and be reminded of the higher goals and ideals to which we should all aspire. Goals and ideals that form the basis of this Nation and the philosophy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it most appropriate, as has been stated by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. COURTER] and the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] in a bipartisan fashion, that this body individually and collectively recommend that our colleague KATIE HALL, be added as a member of this important Commission, and I would support wholeheartedly that effort. She has been intimately involved in the passage of this important legislation, setting up this Commission, and previous to that the legislation which was its genesis, the establishment of the Martin Luther King, Jr., holiday. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation and of the legislation which established the Martin Luther King, Jr., holiday.

I trust that there will not be a dissenting vote when we move to pass H.R. 5890.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recapture my time as there are other colleagues who would like to speak for a couple of moments on this side of the aisle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5890, legislation which would establish a Commission to assist in the first observance of the holiday celebrating the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. As one who was a proud sponsor of legislation to establish this national holiday, I am pleased to support this bill.

As we know, the bill creates a 31-member Commission to plan the first celebration. The committee explains that they do not want to make this celebration just another 3-day weekend. And they are right. As we plan for the January 20, 1986, holiday, we should encourage all citizens of America to understand what Martin Luther King meant to this Nation—not just to the black people of America, but all the people of America.

Mr. Speaker, Martin Luther King strove for peaceful solutions to terrible problems facing this Nation in the 1960's. He strove for justice and peace in a nation torn by racial strife. It is important that the Commission established today—established at no cost to the Federal Government—educate the Nation to the work of Martin Luther King so that the first celebration is more than just another 3-day weekend.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS].

Mr. CONYERS. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I begin my support for H.R. 5890 by commending our distinguished colleague from Indiana, Congresswoman KATIE HALL. The gentlewoman who has done so much in the management and leadership on this bill which will help preserve Dr. King's dreams and the ideals he stood for. I want to thank her for what can be nothing more than a very logical extension of our commitment to the memory of Dr. King; a commission that will examine the best ways that this country and our citizens can move forward in the celebration of his birthday.

I think that the proposed structuring of the Commission, with particular respect to the appointment of Coretta Scott King as well as other civil rights leaders who will surely be reflected in it's makeup, goes to the very reality of the change that is coming in this country that is now being seen, I think, and being felt by the passage of the holiday bill only so recently. Passage of this bill today, will be yet another step toward translating Dr. King's dreams and ideals into a practical living reality.

Several months before his tragic assassination, King stated with his unique clairvoyance:

> That the struggle for peace and the struggle for civil rights as we call it in America, happen to be tied together * * * I feel that the people who are working for civil rights are working for peace; I feel that the people working for peace are working for civil rights and justice * * * We must not allow our creative protests to degenerate into physical violence (but) we cannot turn back * * * no, no, and we will not be satisfied until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream.

King's methods were nonviolent. He took the moral highground relentlessly searching for the ultimate truths. His beacon was civil justice and peace. His dream of this epitomized the most time honored democratic ideals this country was founded upon, demonstrating that we can conquer the endemic racial and sectional strife within the pluralistic framework of the system. He broke the segregationalist walls that were fragmenting our society and built the bridges which help bind us together. In doing so, he renewed our alliance with democracy and reinvigorated the Constitution.

The issue before us today, is how to best keep the dream alive and vital. Why even keep the dream alive if only to do it halfheartedly.

The objective of the commission is to give those leaders, who lived through and who were permanently shaped by the civil rights upheaval, an opportunity to work together to determine how best to perserve the King ideal, how best to enshrine it in our institutions, how best to remember the hope that the dream represented to us all, and most importantly how best to teach it to our children.

I rise in support of this bill and sincerely hope that this body will pass it unanimously.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. CONYERS. I yield to my colleague from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. I appreciate the gentleman from Michigan yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be said on this floor that the gentleman from Michigan certainly deserves as much credit as anybody in this body for his steadfast, courageous, and tenacious introduction year after year, in his encouragement to this body and to the Nation that we take the appropriate step with which this commission will deal and that of course is the national celebration of the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Members of the House would again want to reiterate their admiration and thanks to the gentleman from Michigan for his critical and long standing and essential leadership on this issue. I congratulate the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague. Without his strong support for and deep appreciation of the contributions of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., it might have taken even longer to accomplish our task.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS].

Mrs. BOGGS. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Madam Chairman, for yielding to me.

I rise in full support of the Commission for the appropriate celebration of the Martin Luther King holiday. In a very practical manner, I have served on several commissions to celebrate national holidays. Currently I am on the Truman Centennial Commission and I know how vitally important the work of these commissions are to the celebration of the events, to the proper, appropriate, dignified, and yet joyous celebration of historic events, particularly those that memorialize citizens who represent certain significant changes in the history of the United States.

So it is with great fervor that I would ask the Members of this body to be certain to pass this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the Commission is composed in a most remarkable manner. It insures that we will encourage full participation at the national, the congressional, the State, and the local levels and yet the private sector will have a great part in arranging for the celebration. It also ensures that Mrs. King, Coretta Scott King, who has, with our colleague the gentleman from Michigan, been so persistent in her hopes for the realization of the holiday set-aside, will be on the Commission as will other members of the King family.

We know that this Commission will pull together all the enthusiasm and the joy and the plans of thousands of organizations, large and small. Because there will be so many plans that will be made we will need a commission which will be able to make certain that the celebration is one of dignity as well as one of joy and entertainment.

It is with great pride that I come before you and ask you to support my colleague, Mrs. HALL, who has been one of the most splendid Members of this House and has shepherded this legislation as she did the earlier legislation for the holiday institution, itself, with care, love, and great persistence.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Indiana.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the ranking member of the House Subcommittee on Population and Census, Mr. COURTER, and all of the members of that subcommittee who represent both sides of the aisle for their ideas, their help, and everything they did to make it possible to get this legislation adopted out of the subcommittee by unanimous vote.

Of course we would like to thank Chairman FORD and all the members of the full committee for doing the same.

Today we come asking the consideration of all Members of this house in getting this legislation adopted so that a meaningful celebration can take place in 1986 and that America can indeed be proud to have a national holiday in honor of a person who not only touched this country but many persons throughout the world.

He was a great civil rights leader, a humanitarian, a distinguished member of the clergy, and a Nobel Peace Prize winner and he did many outstanding things to so many people.

We certainly do ask the support of all.

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 5890, legislation to establish the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission, a Commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr. It is imperative that we support the creation of such a Commission in order to ensure that the celebration honoring Dr. King and his legacy befit the magnitude and essence of his contributions to our Nation and to the rest of the world.

The Commission would consist of 31 members, including 4 appointed by the President, 4 by the Speaker of the House, and 4 by the President pro tempore of the Senate. In addition, the widow of Dr. King, Mrs. Coretta Scott King, two other members of the King family, and two representatives from the Martin Luther King Center for Non-Violent Social Change would serve on the Commission. This group would appoint the 17 other members in a manner which would reflect the diversity of America's population and interests. Together, these individuals would act in an advisory capacity to public and private organizations planning activities for the holiday. For organizational and efficiency purposes the Commission would be allowed to appoint a director and a staff consisting of not more than five people. The Commission would make a final report to the President and to the Congress concerning its activities no later than April 20, 1986, after which it would disband.

This legislation involves no sacrifice by American taxpayers. The bill provides that the Commission be funded by donations from individuals and from public and private organizations. The Congressional Budget Office, thus, estimates no cost to establish the Commission.

I was pleased to be a cosponsor of the bill by which, in passing, our Nation gave formal recognition to the importance of Dr. King's life and death, designating the third Monday in January as a legal public holiday, beginning in 1986. In doing this, we demonstrated an understanding of the need to continually rededicate ourselves to the ideals preached by Dr. King, which included, nonviolent resolution of conflict; reconciliation amongst all men; and commitment to the struggle against poverty, racism, and violence.

Now let us complete the task by ensuring that the ceremonies and activities of January 20, 1986, set a precedent to be followed in years to come. Let us pass H.R. 5890 and establish this Commission to advise and assist the individuals and the private and public organizations participating in the first celebration of this historically and morally significant event.●

I wish to commend my esteemed colleague from Indiana for taking the initiative with this significant legislation.

As you know, I previously chaired the Subcommittee on Census and Population and sponsored the bill which established a national holiday to honor the life and work of Dr. King. For this reason, I feel a special responsibility to ensure that the first official observance of this holiday is handled in a manner that reflects the esteem and pride all Americans should feel on this important occasion.

The Commission will be a temporary structure and will disband forever after its work is done. It will require no Government funding and will be supported entirely through private contributions. Thus the bill does not propose a permanent structure that will burden the budget and take scarce resources away from vital areas where they are needed.

I urge my collegues to support this bill. Passage of the legislation will reaffirm the congressional commitment reflected in the act establishing a national holiday. It will send a message to all Americans that the Congress cares enough about the principles Dr. King lived and died for. To ensure that the occasion of the first national holiday in his honor will be marked by appropriate ceremony, seriousness, and support, Mr. Speaker, I know of no better way to make this happen than to establish the Commission called for by this bill.

The Commission will reinforce the intent expressed in the original act, and will demonstrate to all Americans that the Congress continues to care about social justice and healing the wounds inflicted by segregation and discrimination. This important process will not be finished when the Commission ends its work. But establishing the Commission is a concrete way we can show that we want to move forward in the future and build the kind of society in which people are judged by the content of their character and not the color of their skin.

I hope my colleagues find it in their hearts and souls to support this bill. I again wish to thank the gentlewoman from Indiana for her efforts in this regard. Passage of the bill would be a way of thanking her and showing respect for the contributions she has made to this body.●

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, it is the nature of this body and of the American people, that when we set out to accomplish something we don't just want to get it done, but we want to do it as well as we know how. This past October the Congress passed legislation and the President signed into law a measure designating January 26 a national holiday commemorating the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Before us today is a bill which calls for the establishment of a Commission to assist in the first observance of that holiday. Fundamentally, the purpose of this Commission is to insure that we don't just observe this day of memorial but, in fact, we celebrate it. Because more than a day of remembrance for Dr. King alone, January 26 is to serve as a time for reflection and celebration of the principles which Dr. King lived for and ultimately died for.

Twenty one years ago when Martin Luther King Jr., wrote from his cell in a Birmingham jail that "injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere," he was speaking not only as a leader of the black community but as the conscience of our Nation. So long as anyone was judged by the color of their skin, their gender or the church or synagogue where they prayed, Americans had and continue to have today an obligation to speak out, to protest. Who can doubt that without the accomplishments of Dr. King yesterday we would have had a black Presidential candidate and a woman vice presidential nominee today. These are but a few of Dr. King's legacies.

The bill before us would establish a Commission whose purpose is twofold: First, to encourage appropriate nationwide ceremonies relating to the first observance of the holiday honoring Dr. King and second, to provide, with regard to this observance, advice and assistance to Federal, State and local governments, and to private organizations. The maintenance and expenditures of the Commission are to be made from privately donated funds and therefore represent no further burden on the Federal budget.

We have taken action to honor a man of immeasurable conviction and merit, it is only appropriate that we go one step further and assure that this day of remembrance be commensurate with the great deeds and accomplishments of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.●

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and with that, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HALL] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5890, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXEMPTING RESTAURANT CENTRAL KITCHENS FROM FEDERAL INSPECTION

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5223) to exempt restaurant central kitchens from Federal inspection requirements, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 301(c)((2) of the Federal Meat Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 661(c)(2)) is amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "For the purposes of this subparagraph, operations conducted at a restaurant central kitchen facility shall be considered as being conducted at a restaurant if the restaurant central kitchen prepares meat and meat food products that are ready to eat when they leave such facility and are served in meals or entrees only to customers at restaurants owned or operated by the same person, firm, or corporation owning or operating such facility.".

SEC. 2. Section 5(c)(2) of the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 454(c)(2)) is amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "For the purposes of this subparagraph, operations conducted at a restaurant central kitchen facility shall be considered as being conducted at a restaurant if the restaurant central kitchen prepares poultry products that are ready to eat when they leave such facility and are served in meals or entrees only to customers at restaurants owned or operated by the same person owning or operating such facility.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

31-059 O-87-21 (Pt. 15)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5223. This bill would provide an exemption from Federal meat and poultry inspection requirements for restaurant central kitchens that prepare ready-to-eat food for sale to individual consumers at restaurants owned or operated by the same person.

Currently, USDA does not inspect kitchens which distribute products to only one restaurant. If the central kitchen distributes food products to two or more restaurants, though, the central kitchen must be inspected.

Restaurants, per se, are exempt from Federal inspection under the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Poultry Products Inspection Act. Restaurant central kitchens, however, under USDA requirements, are inspected on the same basis as meatpacking plants and processing operations and must met the same regulatory requirements for sanitation, equipment, and facilities.

In the view of the committee, exempting restaurant central kitchens from Federal inspection would alleviate regulatory burdens upon the industry and minimize taxpayers' expense. At the same time, consumers would continue to be assured that they will receive wholesome, unadulterated, and properly labeled meat and poultry products. The adulteration and misbranding provisions of the Meat and Poultry Inspection Acts would continue to apply, notwithstanding the exemption from the inspection requirements. In addition, operations at central kitchens would continue to be subject to local health inspection. The committee believes that the rationale that served as a basis for exempting restaurants from the Meat and Poultry Inspection Acts should apply as well to central kitchens serving restaurants owned or operated by the same person.

In the past, restaurants purchased raw ingredients for their menu items and prepared them on site at each restaurant—in essence a decentralized food service system. The quality of the product could vary from one restaurant to another depending on the ingredients, personnel, equipment, and so forth. In addition, these decentralized operations were becoming costly in terms of labor and equipment costs. With the use of standardized recipes and new preparation procedures, the food service industry began to centralize its purchasing and preparation of food products.

The advantage of centralized food service systems is that, first, quality of menu items is uniform from one restaurant to another, and second, dollar savings are realized by buying in large bulk quantities and reducing food labor costs.

This is essentially a technical amendment to include the term "restaurant central kitchen" in the exclusion for "restaurants" under the Meat and Poultry Inspection Acts, since they are the same thing.

Since central kitchens were not specifically excluded, USDA expanded its jurisdiction to include them when inspecting meat processors and packing plants. These facilities are not meatpackers nor processors. They are restaurant kitchens differing only in location. They cook with products that have been inspected at several levels in the packing/processing stage, and the kitchens themselves are inspected by State and local health departments the same as any other restaurant kitchen.

Although only about 20 restaurant central kitchens nationwide are currently inspected, the regulations themselves—written for meatpacking and processing plants—prevent small restaurant owner-operators from expanding and competing. Most small operators cannot build kitchens with aisles as wide and counters as high as processing plants. They cannot afford specialized equipment. They cannot provide specials rooms for inspectors and pay their overtime.

In March 1983 the Food Safety Inspection Service of the Department of Agriculture published a study entitled "An Analysis of Exemption Provisions of the Meat and Poultry Inspection Laws." Among the various issues studied was USDA's policy on inspecting central kitchens, and specifically, the question considered was: Should central kitchens which distribute meals or entrees to their owned or operated restaurants be exempt from inspection?

The Food Safety Inspection Service report concluded:

Central kitchens producing food products for their own restaurants encounter many regulatory burdens when under inspection. These central kitchens were established to insure that uniform quality products are served to their clientele regardless of which restaurant serves the product. With the numerous State and local health codes, Federal inspection of these operations has marginal benefits to the consumer. Exempting central kitchens which provide meat/poultry food products to their own restaurants would eliminate the different inspection policies for central kitchens and caterers, and insure a consistent, fairer policy for both. Other adequate considerations, such as local health and inspection requirements, still insure that consumers would receive wholesome, unadulterated products. However, central kitchens offering their products for resale should remain under inspection.

The amendment is strictly limited in scope. It does not exempt any central kitchens that provides any food for a restaurant or facility that is not owned by the owner of the central kitchen, even if most of the meat food products so prepared are served in restaurants owned by the same person that owns the central kitchen. This means, for example, that food prepared in central kitchens for sale to airlines would not be covered by the exemption. Likewise, those central kitchens which cook food to be sold in packaged form would continue to be inspected. The effect of the amendment is that restaurant central kitchen facilities that comport with the foregoing requirements would be exempt from Federal inspection, regardless of whether its operations were intrastate or interstate.

It had been my hope that this matter could be resolved administratively. However, the Office of General Counsel of the U.S. Department of Agriculture issued a legal opinion that an exemption for restaurant central kitchens from Federal inspection can be brought about only through statutory amendment.

My bill will help bring about this much desired reform.

The Department of Agriculture recommends this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5223, a bill to exempt central kitchens from the requirements of the Federal Meat Inspection Act.

Central Kitchens are facilities where a restaurateur prepares food for distribution to other serving sites. Such kitchens are becoming increasingly popular as competition within the industry causes businesses to seek ways of reducing costs.

The Federal Meat Inspection Act in effect now treats such operations as meat packing or processing plants. It did not necessarily intend this; indeed, those who designed the meat inspection program years ago did not forsee the development of central kitchens distributing ready-to-eat foods to satellite serving sites.

This bill will simply cause such central kitchens to be treated as are approximately 500,000 other restaurants where food is prepared and served at the same site. These central kitchens are not meat packing or processing plants, although an interpetation of the Federal Meat Inspection Act now treats them as such. Like the kitchens in virtually all other restaurants, they use State or federally inspected meat products in preparing their meals. As it now stands, these central kitchens are subjected to an unnecessary duplication of inspection, a duplication that is costly and produces little if any benefit for consumers.

Let me reiterate that restaurant kitchens in general are not inspected by State or Federal meat inspectors. They use federally inspected meats and are inspected as to cleanliness by their local or State health department. Central kitchens are subject to these same checks on their products and procedures, but are in addition unnecessarily subjected to a second inspection of meat products.

Only this duplicative inspection of meat products will be eliminated by this bill. The protection afforded to consumers by the fact that the meat that these kitchens use is State or federally inspected and that the appropriate health departments inspect and license them will continue.

This bill will exempt central kitchens from these requirements only if the food that they prepare is ready to eat when it leaves the kitchen and if that food is served to customers at restaurants owned or operated by the owner or operator of the central kitchen. In other words, the exemption is rather narrowly drawn so that the line of responsibility is kept quite clear.

In committee there was some controversy over the fact that meat prepared in central kitchens might cross State lines in contravention of the Federal Meat Inspection Act. This bill makes clear that central kitchens exempted from Federal meat inspection may only serve restaurants in the same State.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will bring the Federal Meat Act into conformity with the needs of a rapidly changing industry. It is a narrow exemption that, in my opinion, will not weaken in any way the all-important protection that the Federal Meat Inspection Act provides our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5223, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HONEY RESEARCH, PROMOTION, AND CONSUMER INFORMATION ACT

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5358) to enable honey producers and handlers to finance a nationally coordinated research, promotion, and consumer information program designed to expand their markets for honey, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5358

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act".

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that:

(1) Honey is produced by many individual producers in every State in the United States.

(2) Honey and honey products move in large part in the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, and honey which does not move in such channels directly burdens or affects interstate commerce.

(3) In recent years, large quantities of low-cost, imported honey have been brought into the United States, replacing domestic honey in the normal trade channels.

(4) The maintenance and expansion of existing honey markets and the development of new or improved markets or uses are vital to the welfare of honey producers and those concerned with marketing, using, and processing honey, along with those engaged in general agricultural endeavors requiring bees for pollinating purposes.

(5) The honey production industry within the United States is comprised mainly of small- and medium-sized businesses.

(6) The development and implementation of coordinated programs of research, promotion, and consumer education necessary for the maintenance of markets and the development of new markets have been inadequate.

(7) Without cooperative action in providing for and financing such programs, honey producers, honey handlers, wholesalers, and retailers are unable to implement programs of research, promotion, and consumer education necessary to maintain and improve markets for these products.

(b)(1) It is, therefore, the purpose of this Act to authorize the establishment of an orderly procedure for the development and financing, through an adequate assessment, of an effective and coordinated program of research, promotion, and consumer education designed to strengthen the position of the honey industry in the marketplace and maintain, develop, and expand markets for honey and honey products.

(2) Nothing in this Act may be construed to dictate quality standards for honey, provide for control of its production, or otherwise limit the right of the individual honey producer to produce honey. This Act treats foreign producers equitably, and nothing in this Act may be construed as a trade barrier to honey produced in foreign countries.

HONEY RESEARCH, PROMOTION, AND CONSUMER INFORMATION ORDER

SEC. 4. To effectuate the declared policy of this Act, the Secretary shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, issue and, from time to time, amend orders applicable to persons engaged in the production, sale or handling of honey and honey products in the United States and the importation of honey and honey products into the United States.

NOTICE AND HEARING

SEC. 5. Whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that the issuance of an order will assist in carrying out the purpose of this Act, the Secretary shall provide due notice of and opportunity for a hearing upon a proposed order. Such hearing may be requested and a proposal for an order submitted by any organization or interested person affected by the provisions of this Act.

FINDINGS AND ISSUANCE OF AN ORDER

SEC. 6. After notice of and opportunity for a hearing has been provided in accordance with section 5 of this Act, the Secretary shall issue an order if the Secretary finds, and sets forth in such order, that, upon the evidence introduced at such hearing, the issuance of such order and all the terms and conditions thereof will assist in carrying out the purpose of this Act.

REQUIRED TERMS OF AN ORDER

SEC. 7. (a) Any order issued by the Secretary under this Act shall contain the terms and conditions described in this section and, except as provided in section 8 of this Act, no others.

(b)(1) Such order shall provide for the establishment and appointment by the Secretary of a National Honey Nominations Committee which shall consist of not more than one member from each State, from nominations submitted by each State association. If a State association does not submit a nomination, the Secretary may provide for nominations from that State to be made in a different manner, except that if a State which is not one of the top twenty honey-producing States in the United States (as determined by the Secretary) does not submit a nomination, such State shall not be represented on the Committee.

(2) Members of the Committee shall serve for three-year terms with no members serving more than two consectutive three-year terms, except that the initial appointments to the Committee shall be staggered with an equal number of members appointed, to the maximum extent possible, to one-year, two-year, and three-year terms.

(3) The Committee shall select its Chairman by a majority vote.

(4) The Members of the Committee shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for their reasonable expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of the Committee.

(5) The Committee shall nominate the members and alternates of the Honey Board and submit such nominations to the Secretary. In making such nominations, the Committee shall meet annually, except that after the first annual meeting, when determined by the Chairman, the Committee may conduct its business by mail ballot in lieu of an annual meeting. In order to nominate members to the Honey Board, at least 50 per centum of the members from the twenty leading honey producing States must vote. A majority of the National Honey Nominations Committee shall constitute a quorum for voting at an annual meeting. In the case of a mail ballot, votes must be received from a majority of the Committee.

(c)(1) The order described in subsection (a) shall provide for the establishment and appointment by the Secretary of a Honey Board in accordance with this subsection.

(2) The membership of the Honey Board shall consist of—

(A) seven members who are honey producers appointed from nominations submitted by the National Honey Nominations Committee, one from each of seven regions of the United States which shall be established by the Secretary on the basis of the production of honey in the different areas of the country;

(B) two members who are handlers of honey appointed from nominations submitted by the Committee from recommendations made by industry organizations representing handler interests;

(C) two members who are importers appointed from nominations submitted by the Committee from recommendations made by industry organizations representing importer interests;

(D) one member who is an officer or employee of a honey marketing cooperative appointed from nominations submitted by the Committee; and

(E) one member selected by the Secretary from the general public.

The Committee shall also nominate an alternate or alternates for each member of the Honey Board described in subparagraph (A) through (D), and the Secretary shall appoint an alternate for the member described in subparagraph (E). Such alternates shall be appointed in the same manner as members are and shall serve only whenever the member is absent from a meeting or is disqualified.

(3) Members of the Honey Board shall serve for three-year terms with no member serving more than two consecutive three-year terms except that the initial appointments to the Honey Board shall be staggered with an equal number of members appointed, to the maximum extent possible, to one-year, two-year, and three-year terms.

(4) In the event any member of the Honey Board ceases to be a member of the category of members from which the member was appointed to the Honey Board, such person shall be automatically replaced by an alternate.

(5) The members of the Honey Board shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for their reasonable expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of the Honey Board.

(6) The powers and duties of the Honey Board shall be to—

(A) administer any order, issued by the Secretary under this Act, in accordance with its terms and provisions and consistent with the provisions of this Act;

(B) prescribe rules and regulations to effectuate the terms and provisions of such an order;

(C) receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary, accounts of violations of such an order;

(D) make recommendations to the Secretary with respect to amendments which should be made to such order; and

(E) employ a manager and staff.

(d) The Honey Board shall prepare and submit to the Secretary, for the Secretary's approval, a budget (on a fiscal period basis) of its anticipated expenses and disbursements in the administration of the order, including probable costs of research, promotion, and consumer information.

(e)(1) The Honey Board shall administer collection of the assessment provided for in this paragraph to finance the expenses described in subsections (d) and (f). For the first year in which the plan is in effect, the assessment rate shall be $0.01 per pound, with payment to be made in the manner described in section 9. After the first year, the Honey Board may submit to the Secretary a request for an increase in the assessment rate not to exceed 0.5 cent per year, but at no time may the total assessment rate exceed $0.04 per pound.

(2) A producer or producer-packer who produces, or handles, or produces and handles less than six thousand pounds of honey per year or an importer who imports less than six thousand pounds of honey per year shall be exempt from the assessment. In order to claim such an exemption, a person shall submit an application to the Honey Board stating that their production, handling, or importation of honey shall not exceed six thousand pounds for the year for which the exemption is claimed.

(f) Funds collected by the Honey Board from the assessments shall be used by the Honey Board for financing research, promotion, and consumer information, other expenses as described in subsection (d), such other expenses for the administration, maintenance, and functioning of the Honey Board as may be authorized by the Secretary, any reserve established under section 8(5), and those administrative costs incurred by the Department of Agriculture pursuant to this Act after an order has been promulgated under this Act. The Secretary shall be reimbursed from assessments collected by the Honey Board for any expenses incurred for the conduct of referenda.

(g) No promotion funded with assessments collected under this Act may make any false or unwarranted claims on behalf of honey or its products or false or unwarranted statements with respect to the attributes or use of any competing product.

(h) No funds collected through assessments authorized by this Act may, in any manner, be used for the purpose of influencing governmental policy or action, except for making recommendations to the Secretary as provided for in this Act.

(i) The Honey Board shall develop and submit to the Secretary, for approval, plans for research, promotion, and consumer information. Any such plans or projects must be approved by the Secretary before becoming effective. The Honey Board may enter into contracts or agreements with the approval of the Secretary for the development and carrying out of research, promotion, and consumer information, and for the payment of the cost thereof with funds collected pursuant to this Act.

(j) The Honey Board shall maintain books and records and prepare and submit to the Secretary such reports from time to time as may be required for appropriate accounting with respect to the receipt and disbursement of funds entrusted to it and cause a complete audit report to be submitted to the Secretary at the end of each fiscal year.

PERMISSIVE TERMS AND PROVISIONS

SEC. 8. On the recommendation of the Honey Board, and with the approval of the Secretary, an order issued pursuant to this Act may contain one or more of the following provisions:

(1) Providing authority to exempt from the provisions of the order honey use for exporting and providing authority for the Honey Board to require satisfactory safeguards against improper use of such exemption.

(2) Providing that in a State with an existing marketing order with respect to honey, the objectives of which the Secretary determines are comparable to the program established under this Act, there shall be paid to the Honey Board as provided in section 9 that portion of the national assessment which is above the State assessment, if any, actually paid on such honey.

(3) Providing for authority to designate different handler payment and reporting schedules to recognize differences in marketing practices and procedures.

(4) Providing that the Honey Board may convene from time to time working groups drawn from producers, honey handlers, importers, exporters, members of the wholesale or retail outlets for honey, or other members of the public to assist in the development of research and marketing programs for honey.

(5) Providing for authority to accumulate reserve funds from assessments collected pursuant to this Act to permit an effective and continuous coordinated program of research, promotion, and consumer information, in years when the production and assessment income may be reduced, but the total reserve fund may not exceed the amount budgeted for one year's operation.

(6) Providing for the authority to use funds collected under this Act with the approval of the Secretary for the development and expansion of honey and honey product sales in foreign markets.

(7) Providing for terms and conditions incidental to, and not inconsistent with, the terms and conditions specified in this Act and necessary to effectuate the other provisions of such an order.

COLLECTION OF ASSESSMENT; REFUNDS

SEC. 9. (a) Except as provided by subsections (c), (d), and (e), the first handler of honey shall be responsible for the collection from the producer, and payment to the Honey Board, of assessments authorized by this Act.

(b) The first handler shall maintain a separate record on each producer's honey so handled, including honey owned by the handler.

(c) The assessment on imported honey and honey products shall be paid by the importer at the time of entry into the United States and shall be remitted to the Honey Board.

(d) In any case in which a loan is made with respect to any honey under the Honey Loan Price Support Program, the Secretary shall provide that the assessment shall be deducted from the proceeds of the loan and that the amount of such assessment shall be forwarded to the Honey Board. When such loan is redeemed, the Secretary shall provide the producer with proof of payment of the assessment.

(e) Producer-packers shall pay to the Honey Board the assessment on the honey they produce.

(f) Handlers, importers, and producer-packers responsible for payment of assessments shall maintain and make available for inspection by the Secretary such books and records as are required by the order and file reports at the times, in the manner, and having the content prescribed by the order, so that information and data shall be made available to the Honey Board and to the Secretary which is appropriate or necessary to the effectuation, administration, or enforcement of the act or of any order or regulation issued pursuant to this Act.

(g) All information obtained pursuant to subsection (f) shall be kept confidential by all officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture and of the Honey Board. Only such information as the Secretary deems relevant shall be disclosed and only in a suit or administrative hearing brought at the request of the Secretary or to which the Secretary or any officer of the United States is a party involving the order with reference to which the information was furnished or acquired. Nothing in this section prohibits—

(1) issuance of general statements based upon the reports of a number of handlers subject to any order, if such statements do not identify the information furnished by any person; or

(2) the publication by direction of the Secretary, of the name of any person violating any order issued under this Act, together with a statement of the particular provisions of the order violated by such person.

(h) Any producer or importer may obtain a refund of the assessment collected from the producer or importer if demand is made within the time and in the manner prescribed by the Honey Board and approved by the Secretary; except that, during any year, the amount of refunds made to importers, as a percentage of total assessments collected from importers, shall not exceed the amount of refunds made to domestic producers, as a percentage of total assessments collected from such producers. Such refund shall be made by the Honey Board in June and December of each year.

PETITION AND REVIEW

SEC. 10. (a) Any person subject to an order may file, within a period prescribed by the Secretary, a written petition with the Secretary, stating that such order or any provision of such order or any obligation imposed in connection therewith is not in accordance with law and requesting a modification thereof or to be exempted therefrom. Such person shall thereupon be given an opportunity for a hearing upon such petition, in accordance with regulations made by the Secretary. After such hearing, the Secretary shall make a ruling upon such petition which shall be final, if in accordance with law.

(b) The district courts of the United States in any district in which such person is an inhabitant, or carries on business, are hereby vested with jurisdiction to review such ruling, provided a complaint for that purpose is filed within twenty days from the date of the entry of such ruling. Service of process in such proceedings may be had upon the Secretary by delivering to the Secretary a copy of the complaint. If the court determines that such ruling is not in accordance with law, it shall remand such proceedings to the Secretary with directions either (1) to make such ruling as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law, or (2) to take such further proceedings as, in its opinion, the law requires. The pendency of proceedings instituted pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall not impede, hinder, or delay the United States or the Secretary from obtaining relief pursuant to section 11 of this Act.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 11. (a) The several district courts of the United States are vested with jurisdiction specifically to enforce, and to prevent and restrain any person from violating, any plan or regulation issued under this Act. The facts relating to any civil action authorized to be brought under this subsection shall be referred to the Attorney General for appropriate action. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to refer to the Attorney General violations of this Act whenever the Secretary believes that the administration and enforcement of any such plan or regulation would be adequately served by administrative action under subsection (b) or suitable written notice or warning to any person committing such violations.

(b)(1) Any person who violates any provision of any plan or regulation issued by the Secretary under this Act, or who fails or refuses to pay, collect, or remit any assessment or fee duly required of such person thereunder, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 for each such violation. Each violation shall be a separate offense. In addition to or in lieu of such civil penalty the Secretary may issue an order requiring such person to cease and desist from continuing such violations. No penalty shall be assessed or cease and desist order issued unless such person is given notice and opportunity for a hearing before the Secretary with respect to such violation, and the order of the Secretary assessing a penalty or imposing a cease and desist order shall be final and conclusive unless the affected person files an appeal from the Secretary's order with the appropriate United States court of appeals.

(2) Any person against whom a violation is found and a civil penalty assessed or cease and desist order issued under paragraph (1) may obtain review in the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which such person resides or carries on business or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit by filing a notice of appeal in such court within thirty days from the date of such order and by simultaneously sending a copy of such notice by certified mail to the Secretary. The Secretary shall promptly file in such court a certified copy of the record upon which such violation was found. The findings of the Secretary shall be set aside only if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence.

(3) Any person who fails to obey a cease and desist order after it has become final and unappealable, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered a final judgment in favor of the Secretary, shall be subject to a civil penalty assessed by the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing and for judicial review under the procedures specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) of nor more than $500 for each offense, and each day during which such failure continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

(4) If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Secretary, the Secretary shall refer the matter to the Attorney General for recovery of the amount assessed in any appropriate district court of the United States. In such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.

REQUIREMENTS OF REFERENDUM

SEC. 12. For the purpose of ascertaining whether issuance of an order is approved or favored by producers and importers, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among those producers and importers not exempt under section 7(e)(2) who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production and importation of honey. No order issued pursuant to this Act shall be effective unless the Secretary determines that the issuance of such an order is approved or favored by not less than two-thirds of the producers and importers voting in such referendum or by a majority of the producers and importers voting in such referendum if such majority produced and imported not less than two-thirds of the honey produced and imported during the representative period. The ballots and other information or reports which reveal, or tend to reveal, the vote of any producer or importer of honey shall be held strictly confidential and shall not be disclosed.

SUSPENSION AND TERMINATION

SEC. 13. (a) Whenever the Secretary finds that any order issued under this Act, or any provisions thereof, obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared purpose of this Act, the Secretary shall terminate or suspend the operation of such order or such provisions thereof.

(b) Five years from the date on which the Secretary issues an order authorizing the collection of assessments on honey under provisions of this Act, and every five years thereafter, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum to determine if honey producers and importers favor the continuation, termination, or suspension of the order.

(c) The Secretary shall hold a referendum on the request of the Honey Board or when petitioned by 10 per centum or more of the honey producers and importers to determine if the honey producers and importers favor termination or suspension of the order.

(d) The Secretary shall terminate or suspend such order at the end of the marketing year whenever the Secretary determines that such suspension or termination of the order is favored by a majority of those voting in a referendum and that the producers and importers comprising this majority produce and import more than 50 per centum of the volume of honey produced and imported by those voting in the referendum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] will be reocognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5358. The bill would enable the producers and handlers of honey and honey products to finance a nationally coordinated research, promotion, and consumer information program designed to expand their markets for honey and honey products.

The program is purely voluntary. Before it can be implemented, it must be approved in a referendum by two-thirds of the producers and importers voting or by a majority of producers and importers voting if such majority produced and imported not less than two-thirds of the honey produced and imported during the representative period determined by the Secretary. To ascertain the effectiveness and continued acceptance of the program, the Secretary would be required to conduct a referendum every 5 years to determine if producers and importers favor the continuation, termination, or suspension of the program.

The bill essentially provides for a self-help program for honey producers and importers. The program would be financed through assessments paid by persons who produce or import at least 6,000 pounds of honey annually and would be operated at no cost to the Government. Provisions are also included in the bill under which producers and importers could obtain refunds of assessments paid by them.

Honey is produced by many individual producers in every State in the United States and in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The maintenance and expansion of existing honey markets and the development of new markets or uses are vital to the welfare of honey producers and those concerned with marketing, using, and processing honey. Unfortunately for this important agricultural industry, however, consumer demand for honey and honey products is not as great as it should be.

It has been difficult to develop and implement a coordinated program of research, promotion, and consumer education because the honey production industry is comprised mainly of small- and medium-sized businesses. Without cooperative action in providing for and financing such programs, honey producers, handlers, wholesalers, and retailers are unable to implement badly needed programs of research, promotion, and consumer education.

This legislation would give the honey industry the necessary tools and impetus to launch a national program to this end. All of this would be financed by honey producers and importers at no cost to the Federal Government.

Other agricultural commodity groups have solved similar problems by forming research, promotion, and consumer education programs. The egg, wheat, wool, cotton, and potato industry campaigns have met with much success. These programs bear out the old merchandising proverb: "It pays to advertise." The honey industry, through this legislation, could follow a similar pattern of activity.

Nothing in this act would dictate quality standards for honey, provide for control of its production, or otherwise limit the right of the individual honey producers to produce or market honey.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of H.R. 5358, as amended.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5358, the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Education Act. This bill will give the beekeepers of this country the marketing tools that they need to spur consumption of one of the two truly natural sweeteners with which Nature has blessed us.

This is not a controversial idea or bill. Indeed, the honey industry proposed the program and has requested that Congress authorize it. The Secretary of Agriculture, in keeping with his commitment to industry self-help programs, has endorsed it. The Agriculture Committee recommends its passage.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue a marketing order for the promotion of honey if two-thirds of those who domestically produce or import honey approve the order in a referendum. It will permit the assessment of up to 4 cents per pound from those who produce more than 6,000 pounds of honey per year. It does not require anyone to contribute if he or she chooses not to, and it exempts small producers who have little impact on the market.

I want to commend the industry for coming forth with this proposal. We have a surplus of honey in this country, largely because of the importation of low-cost honey from abroad. While restricting the inflow of this foreign honey is attractive to some, promoting greater consumption is a more farsighted approach to bringing supply and demand back into balance. Many industries—wheat, cotton, dairy, for example—use promotional programs to market their products. These industries have proven that commodity promotion is effective.

Honey consumption in the United States is only 1.02 to 1.26 pounds per year. Yet, other than pure maple syrup from Vermont, I can think of no other product that functions so well as a sweetener and yet is such a delightful delicacy. I am confident that, if we give the honey industry this tool, they will use it to sweeten us all up a bit.

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5358, the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act and to compliment the chairman of the committee for his authorship of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting passage of the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act which will enable the honey industry to finance a national program for expanding existing markets and creating new markets for honey and honey products.

Mr. Speaker, honey producers throughout the Nation and in South Dakota, which ranks sixth nationally in honey production, know well the need for expanding current markets and creating new markets for our honey and honey products. Despite domestic honey production, domestic use, and our exports of honey all remaining relatively constant according to USDA estimates and projections, price depressing honey imports have risen from 49 million pounds in 1980 to 100 million pounds in 1983 resulting in the volume of honey acquired by the Commodity Credit Corporation under the operation of the honey price support program to similarly increase from 6 million to 90 million pounds between 1980 and 1983.

The industry financed program of promotion, consumer information, and research authorized by H.R. 5358, the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act, is not a panacea for the problems now confronting our domestic honey producers caused by price depressing honey import increases. But it will enable domestic honey producers to expand and develop needed new markets for honey. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and I again encourage the Secretary of Agriculture to make use of the existing authorities available to him to respond to the problems which have been created by increased honey imports.●

● Mr. EVANS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill would permit producers and handlers of honey and honey products to finance by assessment a nationally coordinated research, promotion, and consumer information program designed to expand their markets for honey and honey products.

The general provisions of the bill are similar to those enacted for programs established for the eggs, wheat, wool, cotton, and potato industries.

The bill provides that the program, in order to be established, must be approved by two-thirds of the producers and importers voting in a referendum or by a majority of producers and importers voting if such majority produced and imported not less than two-thirds of the honey produced and imported during the representative period determined by the Secretary. The program would be financed through assessments among those producers and importers who produce or import more than 6,000 pounds of honey within a certain period—a year.

The background in which the need for this promotion and research program arises is that in which during recent years an ever-increasing flow of low-cost imported honey has replaced domestic honey in normal trade channels, forcing honey producers to forfeit large amounts of honey to the Commodity Credit Corporation [CCC] under the honey price support program. Or, producers in certain instances entered agreements for the purchase of their honey by the CCC under such a purchase program.

The marketing order, if adopted, would generally contain the following terms and provisions:

First, establishes a National Honey Nominations Committee composed of members from each State based on recommendations submitted by each State association, members to serve not more than two consecutive 3-year terms;

Second, establishes a Honey Board to administer the act, composed of 13 members selected by the Secretary from nominations from producers, handlers, importers, marketing cooperatives, and one from the general public, to serve not more than two consecutive 3-year terms; members to receive no compensation, just travel expenses to meetings;

Third, authorizes the Honey Board to collect an assessment of at least 1 cent per pound from persons who produce or import a volume of 6,000 or more pounds of honey per year, said moneys to fund administration of orders, functioning of the Honey Board, a reasonable reserve fund, and administrative costs incurred by USDA;

Fourth, authorizes the Board, after the first year, to request the Secretary to increase the assessment rate by not more than one-half cent each year up to a maximum assessment rate of 4 cents per pound of honey;

Fifth, exempts those who produce, handle, or import less than 6,000 pounds of honey per year;

Sixth, prohibits use of funds for false claims on behalf of honey or for influencing governmental policy or action;

Seventh, exempts honey exports from assessment fee;

Eighth, credits against the national assessment State assessments on a comparable program;

Ninth, designates the first handler of honey to collect the assessment from the producer unless the honey is imported, placed under price support loan with the Commodity Credit Corporation, or packed by the producer;

Tenth, allows any producer or importer to request a refund of their assessment;

Eleventh, pegs refunds to importers to an amount not to exceed the amount of refunds made to domestic producers as a percentage of total assessments collected from domestic producers in proportion to total assessments; and

Twelth, provides for the enforcement of orders and regulations through civil penalties and cease-and-desist orders.

Such order, if adopted, would also provide the following terms and conditions with respect to its suspension or termination:

First. Secretary may terminate or suspend an order when he finds such order obstructs or does not carry out the purpose of the act;

Second. Secretary required to hold referendum every 5 years to determine if honey producers and importers favor continuation;

Third. Secretary must hold referendum upon petition of 10 percent or more producers and importers; and Fourth. Secretary shall terminate or suspend an order when favored by referendum majority compromised of producers and importers who produce or import more than 50 per centum of the volume of honey.

I favor this legislation for the reason that I believe honey producers should be given the opportunity to decide whether or not they can expand their markets by promotion and research.

The consumption of sugar including caloric, noncaloric, low caloric, and honey since 1975 has not increased much. USDA representatives estimate this consumption per capita in the United States as follows:

Year:	Lbs. Consumption
1981	133

Meanwhile, as the per capita consumption in the United States is averaging and stabilizing between 1 and 1¼ pounds per year, the per capita consumption in other countries is: Germany, 2.6 lbs.; Russia, 1.3 lbs.; Canada, 2.2 lbs.; and Australia, 1.8 lbs.

It appears that consumption of honey and honey products can be increased if innovative methods are adopted for its promotion and research funds are committed to find products wherein its consumption and use will be enhanced.

If the producers and importers opt to reject the order, then so be it. However, they should keep in mind that the committee adopted the following language without objection as to what action the committee would take with respect to honey in the 1985 farm bill:

> The Committee takes notice of increasing acquisitions of honey by the federal government under the honey price support program. It is the intention of the Committee to consider alternative solutions to such problems during consideration of the 1985 farm bill.

There is a message in this language for both producers and importers.

I also wish to point out a couple of matters in section 9 that I believe merit special discussion in concluding my remarks.

Section 9(h) provides that honey producers and importers may obtain a refund of the assessment under regulations approved by the Secretary except that during any year, the amount of refunds made to importers, as a percentage of total assessments collected from importers, shall not exceed the amount of refunds made to domestic producers, as a percentage of total assessments collected from such producers.

The committee report accompanying this bill in commenting on this provision states as follows:

> For example, if during a six-month period domestic producers request refunds on 10 percent of the volume of honey assessed, then importers may obtain refunds on 10 percent of the volume of imported honey assessed during that period if they so request.

It is my understanding that it is the intent of the committee that if during a 6-month period—refunds are to be made by the Honey Board in June and December of each year—importers request refunds on between 10 to 100 percent of the volume of their honey that was assessed while domestic producers only requested refunds on 10 percent of their volume of honey assessed, then there would be a pro rata refund to the importers based on the 10-percent level established by domestic producers. The principle underlying this rather unique feature of this promotion program is one of fairness and equity. Inasmuch as domestic producers as well as importers will benefit from the research and promotion, it is only fair that the refunds to importers not be permitted to exceed those to producers otherwise the former might be accorded an unfair competitive price advantage.

Section 9(d) provides that in any case in which a loan is made with respect to honey under the Honey Loan Price Support Program, the Secretary shall deduct from the proceeds of the loan the amount of such assessment that shall be forwarded to the Honey Board. As I understand it, whether the producer forfeits the honey under loan or redeems it by paying off the loan, the refund of the assessment may be applied for by such producer. In the event a producer enters into a purchase agreement with the Secretary obligating the Government to purchase the producer's honey production at the end of the production year—April 30—whether the assessment is collected by checkoff or by direct payment by the producer will be determined by the terms of the order issued by the Secretary under this act, as I again understand it.●

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5358, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the two bills just previously passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

(Without objection, Mr. HOYER was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

NANTOU SHIEN GOODWILL MISSION

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome a delegation from the sister county of Prince Georges County, which I represent, Nantou County in the heartland of Taiwan. We are indeed honored to have them as our guests, and enjoy this opportunity to show them our vision of the Capitol.

Nantou County is a place of great natural beauty; its people known for their quiet independence and great affinity for their country. In 1981 then County Executive Lawrence J. Hogan signed an agreement establishing the "sister county" relationship with Nantou. Since that time we have had numerous opportunities to exchange views on trade, cultural, economic, and social possibilities. I look forward to many more years of such constructive interchanges and welcome the members of this delegation today.

My greetings go to magistrate Wu den-Yih, Mrs. Wu and their son, T.W. Wu; speaker Wu Chung-Fa and Mrs. Wu; Mr. and Mrs. Pan Chung; Mr. and Mrs. Tsai Ho-Shien; Mr. and Mrs. Wei Ching-Pin; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Ying-Cheng; Mrs. Lin Chen Tsai-Fong; Mr. Chen Yap-Chuon; Mrs. Lin Chang Wen-Ing; Mr. Hsu Gwo-Bin; Mr. Lin Yu-Shiang; Mr. Chang Chun-Chuan; Mr. Yang Chien-Chung; Mr. Yeh Wei-Jenn; Mr. Tsai Shao-Nan; Mr. Hsu Ching-Tien; and Mr. Wei Lien. These men and women, elected officials, members of the county and local governments, a member of the press, and of the KMT Party, will go far in bringing about a mutual prosperity between our two counties.

PUBLIC BROADCASTING AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1984

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 521 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 521

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5541) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to extend certain authorizations of appropriations contained in such Act, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and each section shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR] pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 521 is a 1-hour open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 5541, the Public Broadcasting Act Amendments of 1984.

The rule provides that the 1 hour of general debate shall be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and that it shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill as original text for purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule. The rule also provides that each section of that substitute shall be considered as having been read.

In addition, the rule provides that when the bill is reported back to the House, any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the amendment in the nature of a substitute. The rule also provides for one motion to recommit. With or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5541 authorizes appropriations for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for fiscal years 1987 through 1989. The funding levels recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce are higher than those requested by the administration. But the funding levels in the bill are consistent with continued good programming on public broadcasting stations. Over the past few years, public broadcasting has made major efforts to supplement declining Federal revenues through other fundraising activities. Yet, despite these efforts, public broadcasting has experienced substantial funding shortfalls and a number of significant and popular programs have been forced off the air or have been considerably scaled back. Without these increased funding levels, we cannot expect to maintain the level of quality programming we have become accustomed to on the public broadcasting system.

Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule and any germane amendment, including cuts in recommended funding levels, can be entertained under the rule.

I urge adoption of the rule and adoption of H.R. 5541.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 521 is an open rule under which the House will consider legislation that effectively triples the budget for public broadcasting and offers yet another example of how we are failing to restrain our spending habits.

The legislation made in order by this rule, H.R. 5541, is a classic example of our authorization process gone astray. The bill authorizes $761 million in appropriations for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for the 1987, 1988, and 1989 fiscal years.

This amount is three times more than the administration's requested budget of $255 million for the 3-year period.

Mr. Speaker, only 3 years ago the Congress reduced the authorizations for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting from $220 million to $130 million each year in 1984, 1985, and 1986.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce is apparently not content to leave well enough alone, even though we enacted a supplemental authorization which raised the appropriations levels for 1984, 1985, and 1986 to $145 million, $153 million, and $162 million, respectively.

Under this rule, the Energy and Commerce Committee substitute will be read for amendment by sections. The committee amendment is open for amendment under the 5-minute rule, and amendments will be necessary if the Congress is do anything about the massive increases in Federal funding authorized in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, despite the controversy over the unrestrained spending in this bill, there is no controversy about this rule. I support the adoption of the rule, and since I have several requests for time, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on this side.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, since those who have requested time have not appeared, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 521 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5541.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5541) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to extend certain authorizations of appropriations contained in such act, and for other purposes, with Mr. GLICKMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH].

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5541 authorizes funds for CPB for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989 at levels of $238 million, $253 million, and $270 million respectively. H.R. 5541 also authorizes the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987 at $50 million, $53 million, and $56 million respectively. These funding levels are identical to those included in Senator GOLDWATER's bill, S. 2436, which was recently passed by voice vote by the full Senate.

Additionally, this bill clarifies CPB's flexibility and responsibility in the use of funds appropriated to it under the allocation formula of existing law. H.R. 5541 also repeals the so-called unrelated business income penalty, which is a clear disincentive to stations developing alternative sources of revenue. Finally, H.R. 5541 eliminates the requirement that a strict 75 percent of Public Telecommunications Facilities Program funding be used for unserved areas of the country, although bringing service to unserved areas will remain a priority of the program.

H.R. 5541 was reported from the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, by a bipartisan vote of 14–2, from the Full Energy and Commerce Committee by voice vote, and as I pointed out, a similar bill sponsored by Senator GOLDWATER was passed by the Senate by a voice vote. Public broadcasting is currently at a critical crossroads—it is striving valiantly to fulfill its mission as a provider of diverse and excellent programming while, at the same time, facing unprecedented financial constraints.

The authorization for the system was slashed some 40 percent in 1981. At that time, we had hoped that diminishing Federal funding could somehow be replaced by other sources. The results have not been very encouraging. State and local funding has been similarly cut. Grants from the National Science Foundation and the Department of Education have all but disappeared. Subscriber support, and corporate contributions have plateaued.

Unfortunately, what we were forced to do in 1981—shrink Federal support—has translated into severe cutbacks in programming and has caused immense strain on the system, because the hoped-for alternative revenue sources have not significantly developed. Federal cuts have resulted in many stations having to reduce staff and programming hours, and eliminate local programming. Even the heart of the public television schedule— "Frontline," "Great Performances," and "Playhouse"—have been forced to cut production by 20 percent. "Latenight America" has been canceled, and even "The Lawmakers" has gone out of production for lack of funding.

Similarly, production of children's programs on public television, which unfortunately is the only real source of enriching programming for youngsters, has been subject to sharp cutbacks. The upcoming "Wonderworks," as well as "Reading Rainbow," have been cut 50 percent and 30 percent respectively. Moreover "Sesame Street," a true educational marvel, must now rely for two-thirds of its programming on reruns of previous segments. Beyond production, many local stations are so financially-strapped that they cannot affort to buy many important programs.

Although we recently authorized a modest cost of living increase for the system, it is still only a band-aid applied to a hemmoraging financial situation.

As the minimum amount of Federal funding necessary to restore the level of programming and services provided by public broadcasting, it is imperative that we adopt the funding levels of $238 million for fiscal year 1987, $253 for fiscal year 1988, and $270 for fiscal year 1989. The final figure represents an average annual increase of only 3.47 percent from the $220 million originally authorized for 1983. Since inflation will probably average this or higher, $270 in fiscal year 1989 is no higher (and possibly less) in real terms than was originally authorized for 1983. Thus, these authorization levels represent a fiscally responsible return to a sound financial foundation which will enable public broadcasting to provide programming of excellence and diversity.

H.R. 5541 also authorizes funding for the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program [PTFP] at $50 million for fiscal year 1985, $53 million for fiscal year 1986, and $56 million for fiscal year 1987. PTFP, administered by the Department of Commerce, provides matching grants for planning and construction of public broadcasting facilities so that the benefits of our Nation's public broadcasting system can reach more Americans.

In 1981, Congress enacted sharp reductions in PTFP from $40 million authorized in fiscal year 1981 to about $12 million, which is authorized for fiscal year 1984. Consequently, the current level of funding for the program threatens to severely undermine the goal of assuring that all Americans—who pay for the system through their tax dollars—have access to the benefits of the system.

The administration, as it has done every year, has proposed abolishing PTFP, on the grounds that the program has fulfilled its goals. This presupposition totally ignores the facts:

Thirty percent of the country cannot receive public radio signals;

Ten percent of the public and large geographic areas, particularly in rural areas, cannot receive a local public television signal;

There is no local service in the State of Montana and 15 percent of Missourians do not receive public television signals. Similar problems exist in Arizona, Nevada, Hawaii and Alaska, and large areas of the South.

Moreover, a severe problem is developing concerning the preservation and maintenance of existing equipment: many transmitters are so old that stations must go off the air for extended periods of time when they break, or malfunction.

In fiscal year 1984, only $11.88 million was appropriated for PTFP. However, last year's 324 grant applications requested a combined total of $72 million in funds, backed by an impressive commitment of nearly $30 million in local funds. Thus, only 14 percent of the applications could be granted.

The funding authorized here will bring PTFP more in line with the demonstrated need for the program. The levels in this legislation will ensure fairness to all Americans, by making important, and diverse cultural and educational programming available to the entire Nation.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important funding measure.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the very time that there is so much concern in this Congress and around the country about the size of our Federal budget deficit, this bill proposes to make the problem worse by granting very significant increases—probably unprecedented increases—in Federal support for the Nation's public broadcasting outlets. No matter how you look at the funding levels provided by this bill, the increases are phenomenal. The bill proposes to go from $162 million in 1 year for one particular program, to $238 million for the very next year. That is an increase of almost 50 percent in a single year.

The bill proposes to increase the Federal support for another public broadcasting program from $12 million in 1 year to $50 million in the next year—an increase of more than 400 percent in a single year.

Altogether, this bill authorizes Federal spending which totals $920 million. When we compare the $920 million authorized by this bill with what was spent in the same programs during the most recent period, the comparison is shocking; $920 million in this bill, and $507 million during the most recent period of equal length. That is 81 percent more money.

Just a few months ago, this House passed a budget resolution which stood firmly in favor of exercising restraint in Federal spending. The budget resolution approved by this House recommended an overall increase in domestic Federal spending of only 3.5 percent per year. For public broadcasting, the budget resolution proposed a freeze on current levels of spending.

Compare the budget resolution with this bill. While the budget document urged no spending increase for public broadcasting, this bill recommends massive increases—50 percent in one program from one year to the next, more than 400 percent in another program from one year to the next.

Congress cannot have it both ways. Our Federal Government faces a serious budget problem. It simply will not do for this House to pass a budget resolution that purports to cope with this problem by proposing a freeze on spending and then, when it comes to actually implementing the budget resolution, to pass legislation that proposes massive increased spending authority.

Now let's look a little bit at the purported justification for the big spending increases in this bill. First, public broadcasters claim that their revenues from non-Federal sources are drying up. But that simply is not true according to the public reports that the corporation for public broadcasting has itself made available. The fact is that non-Federal revenues have increased consistently from one year to the next by 12 percent to 16 percent in each of the past 10 years. Moreover, the corporation for public broadcasting has projected that significant additional increases in non-Federal revenues will occur during each year in the foreseeable future.

Public broadcasters also claim that they will have to discontinue broadcasting certain programs unless Congress grants these big funding increases. But, I would venture to say that for every program that public broadcasters will eliminate, they will add a new one. Program schedules always change, reflecting changing tastes. Program schedule changes do not necessarily reflect hard times. It seems to me to be unfair for broadcasters to hold certain programs hostage to substantially higher Federal funding.

I don't mean to suggest that public broadcasting stations could not broadcast more programming if they had substantially more money. Of course they could. All Government programs, theoretically, could do more with more resources.

All I am trying to say is that the massive new funding provided by this bill is too much. It is a bigger increase than almost any other program in the Federal budget.

Moreover, I have got to be honest with you and say that I have some lingering suspicion that public broadcasting stations are not the most efficiently managed entities. If you look closely at the public broadcasting station line-item, expenditures, there is some evidence of inefficient management. For example, recently published statistics show that public broadcasting stations—both radio and television stations—pay their employees higher salaries than commercial radio and television stations. If public broadcasting is in such financial straights, why do they insist upon paying their employees more than their commercial station counterparts?

During the amendments stage of our debate, Congressmen OXLEY and FRENZEL will offer two proposals to restore some responsibility to the funding of public broadcasting. Mr. OXLEY will offer an amendment that would grant public broadcasting a 15 percent increase in Federal spending authority during each of the next 3 years. This is three times the expected inflation rate, and surely it is enough to let public broadcasters squeak by. Mr. FRENZEL will offer an amendment to authorize a smaller increase than that proposed by Mr. OXLEY. I understand that Mr. FRENZEL's amendment will propose a 3.5-percent increase, which after all was in line with the increases recommended by the House for almost all domestic programs in its own budget resolution.

I urge my colleagues to look carefully at both of these amendments. Both amendments allow for significantly increased Federal spending for public broadcasting while restoring a sense of responsibility.

In short, I urge my colleagues to reject the monumental increases in Federal funding provided by this bill and to support amendments that will provide more responsible funding increases.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY].

Mr. BLILEY. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, let me first make it clear that I am not opposed to public broadcasting and Federal funding for public broadcasting. But as my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina, has pointed out, in this time when we hear so much about Federal deficits, and I pledge to my colleagues that during the course of the next 100 days we will hear even more about massive Federal deficits, this is not the time to be going way over budget in increasing funds for any—for any—activity, and in particular for this one.

How can we look our senior citizens in the eye just after having passed a tax bill which will cut back on medicare payments, and then at the same time, in the next breath, come in and pass this legislation at this funding level. It once again points out, to me at least, the skewed priorities of this body.

I would hope that when the gentleman from Ohio later offers his amendment to reduce the funding for this activity that it will be the pleasure of my colleagues to support that amendment and to pass a public broadcasting bill, but to do so at a more modest funding level.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, there has been discussion about this dramatic increase, and there will be, I believe, one amendment offered to this allegedly dramatic increase. and there will be one amendment offered on that situation.

Let me again point out, as I did in my opening statement, what the facts of the matter are. The facts of the matter are that the increase that we are asking for in the authorization level is an average of 3.4 percent, 3.4 percent between 1983 and 1987. That is below the level of inflation.

Let me also point out that the recommendation that this increase be there was initially made by the Temporary Commission on Alternative Financing which, following the 1981 dramatic cuts in public broadcasting, looked very carefully at alternative sources of funding. Those alternative sources of funding have not been found to be available and, therefore, the bipartisan Temporary Commission came back to the Congress and said, "We have to have this increase."

So I would point out to my colleagues, and this will come up again in the debate over the funding levels, the authorization levels, that the funding level is 3.4 percent.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, once again, I am pleased to be able to stand in this well in support of an increase in authorization levels for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. And, once again, attempts are going to be made on the floor to reduce the authorization level below that in the bill. I feel, however, that I must support the committee bill.

Mr. Chairman, funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting is a good investment. It is one of the best investments that the Federal Government can make because it helps to educate our people, it provides quality television programming—expanding to all areas of the Nation. But more expanding needs to be done.

Last year, I mentioned that the public broadcasting station in western Massachusetts has 380,000 viewers each week, with 70 percent of the shows devoted to children's television programming. I said that public broadcasting is the only consistent outlet for educational television programming, and the reductions in funding which we enacted in 1981 are jeopardizing the quality of public broadcasting.

If we do not increase these authorization levels, public broadcasting stations will be forced to continue the pattern of reduction and elimination of programs, hours of broadcast, staff and other services. My Labor/Health and Human Services/Education Appropriations Subcommittee received testimony that in one State, 24-hour broadcast days were reduced to 16 hours, local production has been cut in half, Saturday and Sunday morning television programming has been eliminated, and some cannot afford to come on the air until 4 p.m. each weekday. Scheduled decreases of Federal support will require public stations to pursue deeper cuts.

Now, there is much mention made of an alternative financing study for public broadcasting stations. Although the initial studies appeared to be successful, more remains to be done. Even if the studies underway culminate in a long-term plan for alternative financing, implementation of the current schedule of authorization reductions means that irreparable damage will already have been done to public broadcasting before supplemental financing might materialize.

Finally, let me say this to my friends on my side of the aisle who are upset about the funding increases in this bill. The other body has already passed an authorization for the CPB that equals the levels in this bill. Over half of the other body had cosponsored the bill, and it passed by voice vote—no objections—by unanimous consent. I hope that we can support this bill, pass it, and help public broadcasting stations achieve their important goals.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the gentleman for his valuable support. This is a bipartisan bill. It was reported out of the subcommittee by a 14 to 2 vote, reported out by a voice vote from the full committee.

We have always had for public broadcasting, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY] suggested, very, very broad support and I would hope that we would not falter today in the support by the House for public broadcasting.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words while the ranking member of the subcommittee on which I serve on the Committee on Appropriations, the Subcommittee on Health and Human Services and Education is on the floor. I am glad Mr. CONTE is here because he and I share a concern, which I think the chairman of the subcommittee shares as well.

In the gentleman's opening statement, he referenced a number of programs which were being shut down, production was being stopped for lack of further funding. One of those programs which was listed was "The Lawmakers," program that, from my own personal view, is probably one of the most indepth communications to the American public as to what really happens in Congress, as opposed to a 2- or 3-minute news squib.

I am wondering whether or not there is any possibility in the short term and long term for a program like that to survive. I have been told such a program is not the commercially most enthusiastically accepted but I believe nevertheless one that is critically important. What does the gentleman think the prospects are for further funding of that particular program, or similar programs, would be?

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the gentleman for his concern, which I share, and I believe it is shared by many, many of our colleagues. I do not want to speak for the gentleman from Massachusetts, but he has spoken to me about it, the chairman of the appropriations subcommittee has spoken to me about it, and many Members of the Congress on both sides of the aisle, and many members of the leadership have spoken to me about it.

The Congress has got to be, as the gentleman is aware, extremely careful of not placing ourselves in any kind of a position of dictating or line iteming, or whatever, what kind of programming is on public broadcasting. We went through that, it will be remembered, during the early 1970's when, in fact, there was an attempt politically to punish public broadcasting for various kinds of funding that was going on, which was a direct violation of the first amendment, a direct violation of our long-term commitment to stay out of specific programming.

That is why we advance fund this, so we have that kind of buffer of 2 or 3 years and there is no way of getting a handle on public broadcasting politically.

Having said that, I agree with the gentleman completely that "The Lawmakers" does provide a very sound and indepth coverage. Both the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and WETA, the local station here that is responsible for the production of "The Lawmakers," are committed to the survival of the show and to the coverage of the Congress, and we have all had extensive discussions with them about the overall coverage of this important area.

Because of lack of funding, WETA has taken "The Lawmakers" off the air and hopes now that it will be able to gain sufficient funding in the future from CPB, from other stations, and from underwriters to put the program on sound financial footing and to return it in January. They had felt that with the two conventions and then with the election campaign, and so on, that if they took the program off now, this would give them a 6-month period of time in which to put together the proper financial package for "The Lawmakers." So they are working very hard to attempt to do this.

I think any discussion that we have to encourage in any way possible the funding of that program from outside sources would be good, but again, we have to be extremely careful not to have it appear that there is any political interference in programming, whether it is "The Lawmakers," or news programs, or anything else.

Mr. HOYER. If the gentleman would yield further, I appreciate the gentleman's answer and understand the principle for which he speaks with reference to the relationship of the Congress to the programming aspects of CPB.

At the same time, I think as public officials, in terms of the purpose that public broadcasting serves, one of which is certainly providing a window to the people's Government, to the people's House and to the other body as to exactly what goes on here as we transact the people's business. I think that is a critically important function, and one about which we ought to be concerned, and I know the ranking member shares my view on that.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Maryland, and I also agree with the gentleman from Colorado. That was the reason why when we enacted the public broadcasting we had forward funding in it, because we did not want any political interference in it.

"The Lawmakers" program began in 1980, I believe, and it has been one of the most successful programs. It puts us in a very difficult position as Members of Congress to try to get up here and even speak about it, but I think we have to speak about it. We are not trying to exert our muscle, or anything else. We are saying "The Lawmakers" is an excellent program, it has a tremendous amount of following, and now, with this increased authorization, I hope public broadcasting will take that into consideration. They need about $800,000, I understand, to continue the program until January if this goes through.

Then we can take care of the money part in the Appropriations Committee which we have not put into our subcommittee. But we also hope that they give this very, very serious consideration and give "The Lawmakers" very, very serious consideration and continue that worthwhile program. It is about the only program that I see in public broadcasting or commercial broadcasting which really gives a fair break to the Congress in reaching the American public.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's comments. I understand we are saying that we think this is symptomatic of the "Lawmakers" problem and is symptomatic of the funding problems that exist for public broadcasting, for "Sesame Street," "Playhouse," "The Lawmakers," "Reading Rainbow," and the whole series of very good substantive programs that are having a difficult time.

I do not know if I mentioned that the Eastern Education Network, which is a consortium of public broadcasting stations, has passed a resolution committing it to the support of "The Lawmakers." With NETA's commitment and with CPB, we are trying by January to see if that kind of support can be there, and I am very hopeful we will be able to find public support for "The Lawmakers."

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I share the gentleman's sensitivity to the need to keeping insulation for public broadcasting from political influence. Having said that and meaning that, I think it is also important to recognize that this legislative process of ours is frequently difficult for us to understand, and the citizen out there, trying to inform himself of the issues of the day, has precious little opportunity to see indepth analyses of what is going on in this institution. "The Lawmakers" has done a superb job of doing precisely that.

Perhaps some lawmakers standing up and saying they should do a program about lawmakers may seem self-serving, but I think what we are all saying is that the public has an extraordinarily difficult time knowing what we are doing, even with all the media covering this institution, sometimes not very well and sometimes with a depth of about a quarter of an inch.

"The Lawmakers" has done an excellent job, and it is a shame that there is not adequate funding so that that kind of program can be continued for the benefit of all the public.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the subcommittee chairman for yielding.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding.

If someone were to be watching this particular dialog today who was not particularly schooled in what was happening, it seems to me the inference may very well be that to make certain that "The Lawmakers" is placed back on the schedule one would have to see this particular bill pass and become law and, therefore, be in the appropriation after that.

I am sure the chairman of the subcommittee did not want to leave the impression with the Members of the House nor with the general public that this is really an ad hominem discussion about the merits of "The Lawmakers" program and certainly not to be tied to the success of this bill in any way.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield back, I think the reference is to "ad programinem" and not to "ad hominem."

I am happy to yield further to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will let that pass.

But I think we ought to make it very clear that the discussions that the gentleman from Maryland brought up, and I think very adequately, certainly should not be reflected on whether in fact this particular piece of legislation should pass in this House today. I think that we ought to make that very clear on the record.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his comments, and I would make it very clear on the record that the Congress does not authorize any particular program or suggest we not have any particular program. However, the level of funding we are talking about is symptomatic of the very deep problems that public broadcasting has in programming and in facilities overall, and this happens to be a symptom of the deep problems facing public broadcasting.

I would hope that most of my colleagues would band together in support of public broadcasting, as we have in the past, and would not flag in our commitment to public broadcasting.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, would the subcommittee chairman yield for just 1 additional minute?

Mr. WIRTH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, in following up on what the ranking minority member said and what the subcommittee chairman said in response, it is, of course, true that this is not an issue as to whether or not this bill has merit. I think this bill has merit, and I am going to support it.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield back very briefly, this bill was put together before the problems of "The Lawmakers" came up. Therefore, we would have been considering this bill even had "The Lawmakers" not run into a problem. This is just a further emphasis of the need for this particular legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I yield further to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, the point of the subcommittee chairman's is accurate and well taken. I would reiterate that there is a 1984 supplemental bill pending which provides $15 million extra for fiscal year 1984, for $23 million extra for fiscal year 1985, and for $32 million for fiscal year 1986, for a total of $70 million additional to that already appropriated to try to meet the problems of shortfalls of which the subcommittee chairman spoke which require this closing down of production levels.

I would hope that because of the moneys we are making available hopefully in the near future, we could move in the direction of trying to reestablish production lines on a definite long-term basis.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, absolutely, the gentleman is correct.

We certainly appreciate the great support of the Appropriations Committee and its distinguished chairman and ranking minority member. We thank them for their support of public broadcasting. They have been extraordinarily helpful in the past. This inflation increase agreed to by the other body and agreed to, I hope, by all of here will be a step toward insuring the stability of public broadcasting.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, just in closing the discussion, I think it is very important, as I pointed out, to recognize that someone perhaps more cynical than this gentleman would see the timing of the decision to take "The Lawmakers" off the air is some effort at trying to provide some kind of undue pressure.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield back briefly, I do not think any one of us agrees with that view.

Mr. OXLEY. I would certainly hope not, but I think one has to look at when the program started in 1980, and even with the draconian cuts the gentleman from Colorado talked about, the program was able to air through those particular years during those supposed drastic cuts, and I think one has to wonder about the timing of the announcement.

Mr. WIRTH, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would yield back, I just think it is inappropriate to suggest that of "The Lawmakers." After all, in this bill, as the gentleman knows, we are talking about a 1987 authorization, with a crisis for some programs for 1984. That is a long, long way away.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to point out that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr WIRTH] has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH].

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend my good friend, the gentleman from Colorado, and my distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE], who served on the bipartisan Temporary Commission for Alternative Financing for Public Telecommunications. That was a body which did, I think, outstanding work and which made it plain that there is really no way that we can anticipate sufficient increases in funding from private sources to compensate for the cuts in Federal funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and for public broadcasting which have occurred in recent years.

I would observe that the bill that is before the committee today is an excellent one. It has strong bipartisan support. It came from the Committee on Energy and Commerce by voice vote, and it is substantially identical in amount of money authorized to that which one will find in the Senate bill which has already passed the Senate and which has 56 cosponsors, about evenly divided on both sides of the political aisle.

I would observe that the level of funding in this bill will by 1989 not even fully restore this Nation's public broadcasting endeavor to the level of funding which existed for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting in 1982. In real dollars, there is in 1989 no increase in funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

As the House has already heard, funding for public broadcasting was cut drastically as part of the 1981 Reconciliation Act on the grounds that all programs should share the burden of bringing Federal spending under control. The House agreed with this but did so with an important understanding in mind: That appropriate alternative sources of financing would be available in sufficient amounts to prevent public broadcasting services, programming and coverage from deteriorating significantly. To emphasize this, the Reconciliation Act simultaneously created the bipartisan TCAF to investigate alternative sources of financing and to report back to Congress on the appropriate long-term role of various types of funding, including Federal financing. Last October the TCAF submitted its report to Congress. The Commission concluded that a number of alternative sources of income are or could be useful supplements to traditional financing and should be encouraged; but none, whether separately or combined, has the potential to replace Federal funding or compensate for its reduction. The recommendation was clear and unequivocal: By all means take steps to encourage alternative income sources—but if you really want to ensure a sound, high quality public broadcasting system there must be a solid foundation of Federal financing.

H.R. 5541 is designed to provide just that. The authorization levels are adequate but not excessive—by 1989 they will merely restore public broadcasting to the same level in real dollars originally authorized in 1978 for the fiscal year 1983. As to encouraging alternative sources, some of the TCAF's recommendations have been or are being dealt with at the FCC—such as allowing enhanced underwriting. Another recommendation, repeal of the unrelated income tax penalty, is included in H.R. 5541.

Restoration of public broadcast financing to a sound, responsible footing will, if the House acts today, come none to soon. Since 1981, public broadcasting has been under severe and increasing pressure. Despite enormous effort by public broadcasting, corporate and private donations have not come close to replacing lost Federal funds. Public broadcasting has been able to avoid complete collapse by living off its existing capital. But this cannot go on much longer. Its equipment is wearing out, its existing stock of programming is exhausted and new programs are being canceled or not even started. It is imperative that we take steps now to restore sound financing for the latter part of the decade or public broadcasting as we have come to know it will simply disappear by the end of the decade.

I would observe that public broadcasting is a necessary and an essential part of our information education, and telecommunications system. It is a part which enriches and lends quality to American life, and I would urge my colleagues to support the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, first, I'd like to compliment the Chairman of the Telecommunications Subcommittee for his fine work on behalf of public broadcasting. Second, I'd like to give special thanks to two Members of this House, Mr. SWIFT and Mr. TAUKE, who served in the bipartisan Temporary Commission on Alternative Financing for Public Telecommunication [TCAF]. This bill is largely based upon the recommendations which the TCAF made after a careful and thorough study of the issues. Last, and perhaps uncharacteristically for me, I'd like to commend the Senate for its strong bipartisan support for sound Federal funding for public broadcasting. S. 2436, which is virtually identical to H.R. 5541 and has the same level of authorization, was introduced by Senator GOLDWATER on March 19, 5 weeks before H.R. 5541. It passed the Senate by voice vote on June 15, by which time it had 56 cosponsors representing the entire spectrum of both parties in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] has 21 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Iowa for yielding me this time.

I would simply point out in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], the chairman of the full committee, that the financial projections for public broadcasting for the years 1987, 1988, and 1989 show substantial potential increases in non-Federal income. I might quote from those figures that came directly from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. In 1987 they projected from a source of $640 million in 1982 up to $906 million in 1987, $974 million in 1988, and in 1989 over $1 billion in non-Federal income.

That hardly seems an inadequate amount of non-Federal income from those particular sources. The fact is that over the years, and I have supported public television, I happen to be a subscriber to public television and a member, but the fact remains of the inability of many of the local stations to attract enough membership and to attract enough contributions to keep their non-Federal income increasing over their efforts.

I have seen figures, for example, to indicate, Mr. Chairman, that 1 out of every 10 persons who watches public television actually is a member or actually contributes to that system. I would dare say that is hardly a ringing endorsement for public broadcasting in this country, if you can get only 1 out of 10. In our business, if you only get 1 out of every 10 votes, you are not going to win too many elections; and yet that is exactly what has happened in public broadcasting.

The fact is also, as was demonstrated in the testimony in the subcommittee as well as the committee from the various members that the opportunity for outside income for those stations has basically been ignored. There was an experiment to provide for limited advertising. It worked very well in Chicago. We had a gentleman from the public television station in Chicago tell us that it worked quite well for them and they had raised over $3 million in a 9-month period during that particular time, to give them an opportunity at some alternative ways of funding besides coming back to Uncle Sam and asking the taxpayer to ever increase the amount of money we spend on public television and public radio.

I think the facts really speak for themselves. The leadership of public broadcasting came in and simply said: We reject any opportunity even on an experimental basis to continue the option of getting income from outside sources. We are simply coming to the Congress and asking for this tremendous increase.

Fifty percent in the first year, and if you look at the overall figures for the 3-year period, it is an 81-percent increase in the authorization.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL] was absolutely correct when he said that we have heard a lot of rhetoric, particularly last week about the Federal deficits, and the first thing we do when we come back here to Washington is to increase the authorization level for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting by 81 percent over a 3-year period.

We simply have not recognized what fiscal responsibility is and we are continuing to go on our merry way ignoring the real facts of what lies before us.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OXLEY. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

We will, I am sure, get into a significant amount of debate on the numbers and the figures and so on which we have done in the subcommittee and in the full committee and I look forward to that.

Right now I just want to take the opportunity to say that the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], had just commented on the need for this legislation and I wanted to just thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] for his great help both on the increase, the cost-of-living increase that we did some time ago for public broadcasting to help it out in the short term and for his constant and consistent support over all for the public broadcasting system.

I would hope again that all of my colleagues would help in making that investment in public broadcasting and in our future.

I thank the gentleman for yielding and look forward to extensive discussion of these numbers in the debate on the amendment which I believe the gentleman will be offering.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT].

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

I simply wanted to comment on one point raised by the previous speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

As a member of TCAF, I am amused that everybody can read the report of the Temporary Commission on Alternative Financing and everybody reads into it what they want. Having been there, I know that the findings of that commission were that there were not adequate resources external to Federal financing to adequately fund public broadcasting. That should not be lost.

One other point that the gentleman made was, if I understood the gentleman correctly, that public broadcasting leadership would not let the experiment continue. That is totally false. As the chairman knows, because he and I were there and wrote it into the law, that experiment ended because Congress insisted that it end, not be continued without us having an opportunity to examine it and move forward. It was not done at the behest of the public broadcasting leadership. It was done at your and my behest in a sense. It was done because Congress felt we needed to be able to examine the entire thing before we made fundamental changes in policy of how to fund public broadcasting.

If that is something the gentleman disagrees with, he disagrees with us, not with the leadership of public broadcasting.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Washington for clarifying the record and making sure again that the facts about TCAF are on the record.

I should also point out at this point that the projections suggested by the gentleman from Ohio from the projections made by public broadcasting as to what their outside income is are not being met at all by public broadcasting. State funding, other public funding, has decreased rapidly; business support has plateaued. We have not seen the kind of outside support increase in the dramatic fashion that we had all hoped that it might in 1981. It simply has not happened.

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT], a valuable member of the subcommittee.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of our subcommittee and want to identify myself and associate myself with his remarks and with the remarks of the chairman of our full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] and also offer my congratulations to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT] for the leadership that he has offered in this field.

To the Members of the House that have studied this issue, it will come as no surprise to hear any Member of the Congress stand here and complain, as I am about to do, about how disingenuous it is for any other Member of this House to characterize this bill before us today as a 50-percent increase, or whatever they choose to call it, as a major increase in funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and to somehow raise the issue of fiscal responsibility when it is crystal clear that this Congress under the leadership of the minority and of the gentleman who occupies the White House today engineered a Draconian cut in the budget of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, allegedly in order to determine whether or not it would be possible for them to obtain funding from another source. That experiment took place. That experiment revealed that it was not possible for them to do so, and if that was their only reason for wanting to cut the budget in those years then I think that reason has been taken away.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is very clear today that the vote that we are about to take is a vote on whether or not we support the broad aims; and goals and the worthy purposes and the very successful purposes of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting or whether we do not. It comes down to that simple choice.

Again, I offer my congratulations to the leadership of our committee for having brought this bill and this debate to the House in the forthright manner with which they have done so.

I urge every Member to cast a vote today for a viable Corporation for Public Broadcasting by casting an "aye" vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I, along with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT], have represented this House on the Temporary Commission for Alternative Financing for Public Broadcasting and I was one of the members of that commission who sincerely believed that there would be an opportunity for public broadcasting to obtain much of its financing from private sources. Indeed, public broadcasting does receive much of its financing from non-Federal sources. The Federal Government provides a relatively small share of the total amount of dollars that go to the support of public broadcasting.

When we looked at expanding the amount of money that would come from non-Federal sources and reducing the amount that would come from the Federal Government, we considered a variety of alternatives. We looked, for example, at the possibilities for public broadcasting stations to lease their facilities for commercial projects and other things.

We looked at the possibility of public broadcasting stations providing other services besides broadcast services.

We reviewed the possibilities for expanding the efforts of public solicitation.

We reviewed the possibilities for receiving additional revenues from advertising over public broadcasting stations and in many of these instances we did find that indeed it was possible to extract more dollars for public broadcasting from these non-Federal sources.

□ 1530

But, as the gentleman from Washington and the chairman of our committee and the chairman of the subcommittee suggested earlier, the bottom line was that no matter how much we were able to expand these non-Federal sources of revenue there was still a substantial need for Federal revenues in order to maintain a viable public broadcasting system.

We would like to have found a different conclusion. But the reality was that there was not a possibility to reach a different conclusion.

I think it is important to point out that it was not necessary to have Federal funds to keep the local station afloat. That is not the big problem. The big problem is it takes substantial dollars to produce the programs that the local stations carry.

Most of us represent areas that are served by stations that do not do much of their own production. They rely on some of the other broadcasting outlets across the country such as those in Boston and New York to do their production. If there is a substantial reduction in the Federal funding, the production of that quality program will not be there, and no matter how much support we have for public broadcasting from the friends groups in Iowa, we are not going to be able to have good programming on the air.

That is why it is important for us to recognize the fundamental need for maintaining and enhancing the Federal commitment to this program.

I think it is also important for my colleagues who have been interested in the makeup of our broadcasting, both public and commercial, to spend just a moment to consider what they are doing if they call for a cutback in public broadcasting and in our commitment to public broadcasting, especially a cutback that endangers the quality of public broadcasting.

As many of you know, I have been a supporter of efforts to deregulate the broadcast industry. If we are going to deregulate the commercial broadcast industry it is more vital than ever that we have a good public broadcasting segment. I would like to suggest to those who want to reduce substantially the Federal commitment to public broadcasting that they recognize the potential harm that that does to efforts to deregulate the commercial broadcast industry.

I would much rather that we spend our Federal dollars on providing a good, solid public broadcasting system than that we spend our Federal dollars regulating to death the commercial broadcasting system. That is is part the philosophical basis for my support for this effort to enhance and improve the Federal commitment to the public broadcasting system. I think it is a commitment that is philosophically sound for those of us who want a diverse and active exchange of information and views over our airways. I think it is also fundamentally necessary for those of us who believe that a strong public broadcasting system is in the public interest.

We must continue to push for those other non-Federal sources of funding but we need to recognize that those sources are not adequate to maintain the production of good programming that we want on our public airways.

I will retain the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank my colleague for yielding.

I would like to engage my friend from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] in a statement, if he would join with me.

It is my understanding that this bill authorizes funding for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989; is that correct?

Mr. WIRTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WIRTH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. That is puzzling. Last year we passed an authorization for 1984, 1985, and 1986. Having in place an authorization for 3 years prospectively from 1984, what is the policy reason why we are now taking up an authorization measure for 1987, 1988, and 1989?

I do not understand that.

Mr. WIRTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. WIRTH. I guess the gentleman probably was not listening to the discussion earlier, nor understanding the concept of public broadcasting, which is that there be advance funding for public broadcasting for the purpose of insulating public broadcasting from the potential of any political influence. That is why we have always advance funded and authorized public broadcasting and are now doing so in 1987, 1988, and 1989.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank my colleague. Would it not make more sense, though, to wait until 1985 or 1986 before we start talking about reauthorization for 1987, 1988, and 1989?

Mr. WIRTH. This has been an agreement on both sides, and in both bodies, to advance funds on a 3-year basis. We have always done that.

If the gentleman wants to change that procedure in some fashion, he can talk to the chairman of the full Commerce Committee or to Senator PACKWOOD. I am sure that they would be interested in hearing the gentleman's comments.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I know from my colleague from Colorado's viewpoint, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, you expect a change in the White House come next January. It would just appear to this Member from California that from your standpoint it would be better to wait until next year to take up this reauthorization because, if I understand the gentleman's platform correctly, the sky is the limit. The increased spending authorized by the Democratic national platform comes to some $153 billion for the next fiscal year for environmental issues alone. Just think how much you could expand the spending for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting if you had a member of your party in the White House. I mean, would that not appear reasonable?

Mr. WIRTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I am happy to yield.

Mr. WIRTH. I am quite sure that a Democratic administration as opposed to this administration would in fact be a strong supporter of public broadcasting and I say that with significant pride as a Democrat.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. That being the case, it just is puzzling why you would not, suffering, or, rather, working under the joy of expectation, wait until next year and bring this up when you could ask for even a higher level of authorization. It is puzzling as to why we are doing this today, and I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5541, legislation reauthorizing funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. As a consistent and staunch supporter of this program I am all too keenly aware of the need to properly maintain this necessary medium.

During reauthorization hearings before the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, it was brought out that the funding levels requested by CPB were reasonable and justified and that the moneys do not reflect the need for the improved, or expanded levels of service that we would all prefer. Indeed, the money we have authorized is crucial if we are to prevent further erosion of the public broadcast system we have come to enjoy and rely upon so much.

While I might like commercial broadcasters to assume a larger responsibility in providing programming for underserved and underrepresented audiences, that has just not been the case. I have championed public broadcasting because they traditionally have met the need for programs that the commercial marketplace has not provided—that is, programming for children, minorities, women, elderly, and the handicapped. Public broadcasting is also the major source for in-depth coverage of Congress and national and local news. In short, public broadcasting fills a need the American people have relative to creative and sensitive programming that we just do not see on regular televison.

In commending the CPB for their role in providing diverse programing on decreased Federal funds, I must call their attention to a problem I have found need of corrective action. It is my belief that public broadcasting must work harder in ensuring that minorities and women have access to the entire range of benefits and opportunities that Congress have created by this medium. It would appear to me that while the Corporation has done an admirable job in children's programming, much has yet to be done in the way of increasing more training money to minority producers, writers, and increasing the number of minorities hired in decisionmaking positions.

What bothers me about this issue is that legislative report language to public broadcasting has been clear—the Corporation must, given the large amount of Federal funds they receive, be more aggressive in bringing blacks and other minorities into the industry. Only through increased employment of minorities can we begin to really offer diverse ideas, view points, and programming. We can no longer tolerate an entity which exists almost solely on Federal funds to promote program diversity, to ignore congressional direction in the equal employment opportunity area.

In closing, let me urge my colleagues to vote for this legislation. Public broadcasting is a necessary part of our goal to increasing program diversity.●

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to give my emphatic support to H.R. 5541, the Public Broadcasting Amendments Act of 1984, and to voice my strenuous objections to any attempts to dilute this fundamental effort to encourage and modernize our Nation's outstanding public television and radio stations.

In H.R. 5541 Congress has the opportunity to redress a series of major budget cuts which have seriously eroded the public broadcasting system's ability to serve its national and local audiences. This opportunity must not be taken lightly, for public broadcasting in the United States has earned a deserved worldwide reputation as a source of diverse, enlightening, and enriching television and radio programming. In recent years the Corporation for Public Broadcasting has fought desperately to maintain this reputation in the face of dramatically reduced Federal support.

In 1981 the Federal funding levels for public broadcasting were slashed by 25 percent, precipitating the dawn of desperately lean years. As a result of these cuts, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting [CPB] was forced to trim supporting grants to its qualified television stations by 23 percent, and similar grants to its public radio stations by 14 percent. On the bottom line, national public television programming was reduced by 12 percent as public broadcasters tried to accommodate the sudden downturn in support.

As if the loss of direct Federal support was not enough, the public broadcasting community was racked by funding cuts from associated Federal departments and agencies. The Department of Education, which had contributed nearly $50 million to development of the landmark "Sesame Street" and "Electric Company" programs, cut its contribution to public TV by 80 percent. The National Science Foundation, a strong contributor to educational programs, was forced to eliminate its financial support.

Finally, local PBS stations were trapped in a catch-22 by the Federal cuts when the lost Federal funds triggered a dramatic reduction in matching funds provided by State and local governments and universities throughout the Nation. These localized funding resources had been fundamental to the ability of public radio and television stations to respond to the unique demands of their local audiences.

Public broadcasters did not sit by and bemoan the loss of funds. In admirable fashion they initiated a grassroots drive among their viewing and listening audiences to secure greater private financial support for public broadcasting. The success of these efforts is testimony to the hard work of the broadcasters, the appreciation of audiences for the quality of public broadcasting, and the generosity of the American people. Between 1978 and 1982, public broadcasters managed to raise six new dollars from private sources for every new Federal dollar appropriated.

These achievements in fundraising have helped to stem the tide of the Federal budget cuts. However, it is abundantly clear that because of the dramatic loss of Federal funds public broadcasters have been unable to keep up with the necessary technological advancements in their fields. Few sectors of American society have experienced the dizzying modernization thrust upon radio and television broadcasting in the past 10 years. Satellites, computerized editing, cameras, transmitters, and quality control mechanisms are just a few of the broadcast technologies that demand stations to keep current, or fall desperately and expensively behind in capabilities. As the printing press is the fundamental tool of the print media, the broadcast technologies are the hammer and nails of radio and television stations. To ignore proper maintenance, construction, and acquisition is to invite certain and rapid deterioration in capabilities.

But far more important than technology acquisition is the need for our Nation to encourage program development by public broadcasters. If not for the public broadcasting system, our Nation would have precious little cultural, musical, educational, or documentary programs on the airwaves. When I think of my grandchildren being introduced to numbers, the alphabet, and common sense by programs such as "Sesame Street" and "Mr. Roger's Neighborhood," I am deeply grateful for PBS. When I am entertained by programs presenting the finest in music and art, I am sure that PBS is contributing to the beauty of our national texture. When my family is informed by programs such as "NOVA," "Frontline," or "National Geographic Specials," I know that PBS is contributing to a better informed American public. By supporting the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, Congress is investing in the cultral, informational, and educational development of our Nation.

I urge my colleagues to remember that public broadcasting in the United States means 177 qualified television stations and 272 qualified radio stations covering every corner of our country. These stations make special and unique contributions to the lives of our constituents. I know that my congressional district has been greatly served by the outstanding public service of television stations KQED in Oakland and KCSM in San Mateo. I've had the opportunity to work closely with the professionals of these stations, and have gained a lasting respect for their commitment to meeting the needs of the thousands of San Francisco Bay area residents who turn daily to the public broadcasting alternative.

In summation, I urge my colleagues to savor the marvelous contribution of public broadcasting to this Nation, and to endorse its continued vitality by passing H.R. 5541, the Public Broadcasting Amendments Act of 1984.●

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further requests for time?

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the reported bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each section shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Public Broadcasting Amendments Act of 1984".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 1?

If not, the Clerk will designate section 2.

The text of section 2 is as follows:

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR PUBLIC TELECOMMUNICATIONS FACILITIES

SEC. 2. Section 391 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 391) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after "1983," and

(2) by inserting after "1984," the following: "$50,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $53,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $56,000,000 for fiscal year 1987,".

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. OXLEY

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I think I will not object, but for the purposes of addressing a question to the gentleman from Ohio, these are an amendment on the one hand to the CPB and, on the other hand, to public facilities that you are linking the two together; is that correct?

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OXLEY. That is correct.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I will not object, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. OXLEY: Page 2, beginning on line 10, strike out "$50,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $53,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $56,000,000 for fiscal year 1987," and insert in lieu thereof "$14,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $16,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $18,000,000 for fiscal year 1987,".

Page 2, beginning on line 21, strike out "$238,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $253,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $270,000,000 for fiscal year 1989" and insert in lieu thereof "$186,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $214,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $246,000,000 for fiscal year 1989".

Mr. OXLEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to provide for a reasonable increase for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and for the facilities therein, while at the same time maintaining a degree of fiscal responsibility as we do so.

If one would look at the numbers that have been enacted compared to what has been proposed in this legislation I think it becomes quite evident of the rapid increase that we see with the authorization levels.

In 1984 it was $145 million; 1985, $153 million authorized; and in 1986, $162 million.

The proposal for 1987 would be fully a 50-percent increase from the 1986 levels. And if one were to look overall at the 3 years that we are talking about here, we are talking about an 81-percent increase in the authorization levels from the base year that we look at from 1986, which again has already been authorized by the Congress.

The facility construction subsidies are even greater and, in fact, the bill provides authorizations from 1975 through 1987, $50 million in 1985 and even more in 1986 and 1987. The 1984 authorization already enacted is $12 million. Thus, the bill increases the authorization for this program by more than 400 percent in a single year.

That is a massive increase by anybody's definition. The bill authorizes a combined total of $920 million for a 3-year period. This is 81 percent more money than the $507 million the Congress has already authorized for the previous 3 years. There is no reason to believe that public broadcasters need such massive increases in Federal funding in such a short period of time.

Just 3 years ago, Mr. Frank Mankiewicz, a high-ranking public broadcasting official at the time, wrote a letter to all members of our committee stating that only $130 million was necessary for 1986. If $130 million is enough for 1986, why is $238 million necessary in 1987, just 1 year later?

Such significant increases are especially undesirable because public broadcasters have opposed being given statutory authority to engage in limited advertising in order to provide additional revenues.

We had some discussion on that during general debate. It was interesting to note that there have been some successes where those particular pilot projects have been tried as I pointed out in Chicago particularly, where they had had actually created some non-Federal funds through limited advertising and it had no serious repercussions among the viewing public, nor by the commission set up to study the alternative financing.

The budget resolution passed a few months ago by this House proposes to limit spending increases for nearly all discretionary Federal spending programs to 3.5 percent above the previous year's spending level for each of the 3 years covered by the budget resolution in order to help reduce the size of the Federal deficit.

In fact, in developing the budget resolution, Chairman JONES assumed that public broadcasting expenditures would be frozen at their current levels without any increase.

I would remind you that my amendment provides for a 15-percent increase in that first year.

The bill before us thus does substantial violence to the budget resolution which this body has already passed. If this bill becomes law, it will be necessary for Congress to make deep cuts in other Federal domestic programs, including food stamps and other aid to individuals in order to meet the deficit reduction targets contained in the House budget reconciliation package.

Mr. Chairman, we are talking now about a substantial increase for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. All of us know as Members that we are importuned by a various number of groups to increase the level of spending. It has been that way for a long period of time and I suspect it will continue.

But the fact is we simply have to recognize that we have to live within our budget. Again, we have heard a lot of speeches that last several months, particularly last week, about the Federal budget deficit. Yet we are going on merrily ignoring those predictions, ignoring the budget resolution and asking for these kinds of increases to take place.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OXLEY was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. OXLEY. We are talking about, in my amendment, a reasonable compromise; instead of a 50-percent increase as these increases are, indeed, budget busters. There is no question about it.

Yet we are prepared to increase it by that much. Certainly every program has some positive aspects to it or it would never have got enacted in the first place. I support public broadcasting. I am a member of a public broadcasting station, I watch public broadcasting, I enjoy the broadcasting that takes place.

We also have to recognize that we have to represent the taxpaying public here when we are talking about those kinds of increases in the authorization level. Those people I think have spoken rather clearly at least at this point in their support for public broadcasting by indicating that only 1 out of every 10 people who watch public broadcasting actually contribute or actually are members of public broadcasting stations.

I think that says a lot for the kind of support that they still have to incur among the public.

Well, the fact is, Mr. Chairman, it is a lot easier to come to the Congress to lobby the Congress and ask the Congress to increase their Federal share. It is much easier than going on the air and working on getting Members to their particular cause.

So we continue to see those revenue sources increasing every year while at the same time the outside sources, as I indicated before, have projected to be rather substantial increases.

As a matter of fact, projected in 1989, over a billion dollars of non-Federal income. That is hardly a small amount.

Now the chairman of the subcommittee, my good friend from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH], tells us there are certain areas where public television has not reached, public radio has not reached.

Let me also say that there are a lot of areas in this country where there is a tremendous duplication of public television. I live in a town of 38,000 people and I can get on cable three public television stations in that small town. Yet we see that throughout; the duplication of the public television networks throughout this country.

Yes, there are some holes there, but the fact is there are a lot more duplicative efforts than we find people not being able to reach public television and public radio. So I would ask that this House seriously consider a very reasonable amendment, a 15-percent increase which is obviously much more, about three times more than just about any other program is getting around here these days. I think it is a reasonable compromise.

Mr. Chairman, I would certainly ask the House's support for this very worthwhile amendment and one I think that brings some fiscal sanity to the process while at the same time giving the Corporation for Public Broadcasting the increases they need to increase their programming, not only the quantity but the quality as well.

I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. OXLEY

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments as a substitute for the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, if it is appropriate to have those considered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. DANNEMEYER as a substitute for the amendments offered by Mr. OXLEY:

Page 2, beginning on line 10, strike out "$50,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $53,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $56,000,000 for fiscal year 1987," and insert in lieu thereof "and $11,800,000 for each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986 and 1987."

Page 2, beginning on line 21, strike out "$238,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $253,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $270,000,000 for fiscal year 1989" and insert in lieu thereof "and $130,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988 and 1989".

Mr. DANNEMEYER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments offered as a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire, does the substitute offered by the gentleman from California go to two sections of the bill?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. It does, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is amending basically the two sections the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] is referring to?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. The Chair is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman and Members, this substitute will permit the House to consider, as a policy option, reauthorization for years 1987, 1988 and 1989 in an amount that is consistent with what policy course we chose to follow back in 1981, namely to freeze the authorization level at $130 million for those next 3 fiscal years.

I believe that the experiment which we started back in 1981 of permitting the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to seek alternative sources of revenue to fund its activities should be continued.

For example, under existing law the CPB can lease its FM radio subcarriers for commercial purposes. The Corporation for Public Broadcasting can produce commercials for other broadcasters. And of course it can increase its donations from corporate and foundation donors.

Mr. Chairman, I find it a little puzzling to have the House take up this measure relating to fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989 in this year 1984, but of course we on the minority do not control the time; we do not control what bills will come up when. We are here because the majority, the Democratic leadership, decided to bring up this bill.

It appears to this Member from California that if we are to make any serious effort of dealing with the deficit that both parties decry, that is to say an effort to reduce it, rather than stand here mute in the face of it, that we can be constructive with respect to the reduction of that deficit by saying not that we will cut out the funding for the CPB, and there are those who would like to do that, but I think in light of the problems which National Public Radio, a subsidiary of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, has had, its severe and profound management problems, that the last thing we should be doing, in face of these problems, is increasing its authorization.

Therefore, I think we should limit the authorization to the same level that was established in 1981; namely, $130 million for each of those fiscal years.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the substitute and to the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, to deal with the substitute. It simply is not a serious substitute if one looks at the history of public broadcasting. It is intended simply to gut and destroy public broadcasting and if the gentleman was serious about that he could have pursued the recommendation made initially in 1981 by the administration which, in effect, was to zero out altogether the facilities program and to cut public broadcasting back so dramatically that it would die.

So the debate should occur, I think, on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY], which is a serious, misguided, but a serious amendment.

Let me, if I might, very briefly respond. Most of the points have been debated already in the general debate on the public broadcasting bill.

First of all, let me point out to my colleagues the very broad bipartisan support that we have for H.R. 5541 and its equivalent bill in the Senate. These numbers were initially proposed by the majority on the Senate side. This bill was reported out, these identical numbers, by a voice vote from the Senate.

On the House side, the support has been from the ranking minority member of the subcommittee and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE], a valuable member of the Temporary Commission. On the majority side by the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT], the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY], the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT]. We have had that kind of support on both sides of the aisle and in both bodies.

Second, there has been discussion of the deficit and the budget resolution. Let me again remind my colleagues that this is an authorization, not an appropriation. Second, let me remind my colleagues that this is not included in the budget resolution. The budget resolution, and I sit as a member of the Budget Committee as well, the Budget Committee does not go through and develop a budget on a program-by-program basis. And in addition, the authorization, 1987, 1988, 1989, is beyond the reach of the budget resolution.

A fourth point that should be made was reflected by those two valuable members of the Temporary Commission on Alternative Financing, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT]. The Temporary Commission reviewed the results of the attempt to look for alternative sources and unhappily found those alternative sources wanting; came back with the recommendation to the Congress that the stability in the public financing system would be found only with a consistent and steady funding base from the Federal Government. We had all hoped that there would be alternative financing. That has not been the case.

A fifth point that I would ask my colleagues to keep in mind relates to the real percentage increase that we are talking about. If one looks at the history of public broadcasting from the early 1980's to the late 1980's, from 1981, 1982, 1983, to 1987, 1988, 1989, one finds over that period of time a 3.8-percent increase in the authorization for public broadcasting. A 3.8-percent increase across the decade of the 1980's will not even keep public broadcasting up to inflation.

If I had my druthers, I would even further increase the percentage beyond the inflation rate. We have not even done that.

If we go to the Oxley amendment, we are going to dramatically cut the capacity of public broadcasting.

Finally, the facilities program should again be emphasized. As I noted earlier, 10 percent of citizens of the United States cannot receive public television. The gentleman from Ohio mentioned that through cable in his area he is able to receive three public broadcasting stations. That is through the anomalous must-carry requirements that are placed upon cable broadcasting. And I would also point out that less than 50 percent of the American public has access to cable television.

What is important is that 10 percent of the American public has no access to public television. Thirty percent, predominantly rural America, has no access at all to public radio.

If we are going to be fair, all the taxpayers are paying for public broadcasting, let us make sure that all taxpayers have access to this very, very valuable resource both in television and in radio.

So I would hope that my colleagues would recognize that the Dannemeyer substitute is really a throwback to a different set of debate. The serious debate is on the Oxley amendment. We should defeat the Oxley amendment because that does not approach public broadcasting in the constructive bipartisan way with the moderate increases that have been there over a long period of time as found in the initial bill.

So I would urge my colleagues to reject the Oxley amendment.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIRTH. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. OXLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I will not repeat my support for the gentleman's position on the nonfacilities portion because, as I indicated in my remarks during general debate, I think that we should stick with the committee position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] has expired.

(At the request of Mr. TAUKE and by unanimous consent, Mr. WIRTH was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. TAUKE. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I think that it is important to amplify a bit on what the gentleman said relating to the facilities portion of this authorization measure.

It is not just that 10 percent of the American people do not have access to public broadcasting via television, but it is that we have a number of facilities that are getting old and we need to continue to replace those facilities and update them and improve them in order to have high quality broadcasting to those who already receive it.

But in addition, this facilities authorization relates to more than just public broadcasting. For example, in my own State of Iowa, it is being used to develop a telecommunication system for the State which saves taxpayers money and provides for more efficient operation and communication among the public facilities within our State.

It also is being used for educational purposes. The community colleges, for example, use money from the facilities fund in order to establish a communications system which allows the teaching of classes in rural communities or the broadcast of classes in rural communities that are being taught in a campus center and two-way communication is established through those new facilities that are funded by this authorization.

So this is much more than just a question of extending public broadcasting services to those who do not receive it yet, although that is important. It is also maintaining services for those who do receive it and providing those new telecommunications advancements for the public in many areas where it can be exceedingly helpful, ranging from Government management, improved Government management, to education.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the gentleman for his comments on the facilities program in particular. As usual, the gentleman is right on target. I mean absolutely correct about the replacement of facilities and the alternatives provided by public broadcasting.

Again, I would urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Oxley amendment and to support the initial bill in the bipartisan fashion that it has been presented to the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Oxley amendments.

Mr. Chairman, when you compare the Oxley amendment with the bill itself, you can hardly contend that we are undernourishing public broadcasting by increasing it a mere 15 percent every year. I take no second place in my belief in public broadcasting with anyone in this room, but it seems to me that we are constantly bumping into the problem of getting too much of a good thing.

If we are ever going to take the term "deficit" seriously, we have to look at it in all its aspects and at all times.

My notion is that the Oxley amendment will increase authorization 15 percent each year, an amount which is well beyond the inflation rate and which will allow significant growth for the industry.

I suspect that a good case can be made for less, but I come down on all fours with the Oxley compromise. I think we should pass it.

□ 1600

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] as a substitute for the amendments offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Denny Smith for, with Mr. Hawkins against.

Mr. Franklin for, with Mr. Young of Missouri against.

So the amendments offered as a substitute for the amendments were rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] are currently pending. The Chair understands there are a couple of additional speakers.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5541, the public broadcasting amendments, which authorizes funds for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting [CPB] for fiscal years 1987-89 and for the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program [PTFP] for fiscal years 1985-87. I ask my colleagues to support the authorization levels in this bill and to oppose the Oxley amendment.

As my colleagues know, funding for the CPB was severely cut in 1981 as part of the overall Federal spending reduction program. It was hoped that private funding sources would compensate for these revenue losses. However, it soon became apparent that although a substantial amount of private funding was found, the private sector is not able to contribute sufficient amounts to enable CPB to continue its most important programs. Last September, this body passed a supplemental authorization which provided for sufficient funding to cover inflation and the growth in the number of public broadcasting stations.

Today we are considering an authorization level which continues the 1983 level with adjustments for inflation. It seems to me that this is a very reasonable request in light of the quality of services provided by public broadcasting and the unique function they perform. These funding levels have already been approved by our colleagues in the Senate.

The argument is being made that public broadcasting must receive greater funding from the private sector and that the Federal Government should not finance these services to the extent represented by this bill. However, I would like to point out that in my State of Vermont, Federal funding for educational television accounts for only 15 percent of the budget, which is a decrease of 10 percent since 1980. Vermont ETV has made concerted efforts to raise private funding, but private resources are limited. If we were to authorize only the amount requested by the Oxley amendment, serious cutbacks in essential programming would be inevitable. The recent dramatic increases in viewership prove that such drastic cuts would do a major disservice to the public.

I urge my colleagues to review the history of public broadcast funding before casting their vote on the Oxley amendment. The increase in funding may look substantial if one considers only the amounts approved for fiscal years 1984 through 1986. However, we must remember that these amounts represent deep cuts from the 1983 level, cuts that would spell the demise of much of the valuable work of the CPB and the PTFP if they are allowed to continue beyond 1986. For these reasons I ask your support for H.R. 5541 as it now stands.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in favor of the Oxley amendment to the public broadcasting authorization.

Mr. Chairman, I have always been a strong supporter of public broadcasting, both as a State legislator and also as Commissioner of Finance for the State of Utah Higher Education. I was instrumental in the legislature in instituting the translator system to bring public television to all parts of the State of Utah.

The State of Utah has always valued public broadcasting and, therefore, many remote areas of the State can only be reached by that means, so it is very important. We must continue PBS.

This is a serious amendment. I think we need to look at the facts before we vote on this amendment. As my colleagues know, our present authorization, including the supplemental, is $162 million for public broadcasting. The bill would propose to raise that to $238 million in 1987, a 47-percent increase. Actually, it is an 83-percent increase over what we previously passed in 1981.

The Oxley amendment calls for a 15-percent increase each year in 1987, 1988, and 1989, surely a very generous rate of increase, 15 percent per year. In construction it calls for a 16.7-percent increase in the first year, 1985, a 14-percent increase in 1986, and a 12½-percent increase in 1987. Those are very generous increases the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] is recommending.

I would like to suggest that if we are really fiscally responsible, we should be willing to pull our horns in. We do not need the 47-percent increase in the one case and the 400-percent increase in the facilities.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to tell my friend, the gentleman from Utah, that I have carried on a series of letters with the President of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting in which I said that I found the additional commercials they are running for companies today deleterious to the integrity of the broadcasting system. And also the salaries they are paying in their star system are as high sometimes as those they are paying in commercial broadcasting—$200,000 a year.

I think what they should do is find the best talent going, not necessarily stars, and pay them a reasonable amount and not just try to emulate the commercial television.

I like public broadcasting. I almost exclusively watch it. Nevertheless, I think they should be sent a message that they should not simply go the way of flagrant expenditures that the commercial television does, and I support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I will try to plow through this now as quickly as I can.

As a responsible Member of Congress, I must take exception to the massive increases in funding provided in this bill. As I indicated, the bill provides a near 50-percent increase next year for operations and about a 400-percent increase in a single year for facility construction subsidies. This is ridiculous when the recently passed budget resolution only provides a 3½-percent increase for all discretionary programs.

Are we serious about decreasing the deficit or not? The looming Federal deficit is a matter of major concern to the entire Nation. Are we going to pay lip service, or are we going to bite the bullet and control spending?

The Oxley amendment is a very responsible amendment, It does provide a 15-percent increase per year. It is more than four times the amount the budget resolution allows. Any amendment that allows four times the resolution is certainly a responsible amendment and is certainly not a crippling amendment, as was charged earlier. It is not a program-slashing amendment.

There are many other alternatives besides Federal funding for PBS. Let us continue to support PBS, but let us explore alternatives and give the taxpayers a break. We have to get this deficit under control. The only way to do it is to control spending.

Mr. Chairman, I support a reasonable increase in PBS funding, and I urge my colleagues to do the same by voting for the Oxley amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment to the Oxley amendment, but I was late coming to the floor, and my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER], offered an amendment that was very similar to mine. His amendment would have frozen at the 1984 level the 1985 authorization for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

My amendment, Mr. Chairman, would have increased it by 3.5 percent. I will remind each Member of this Committee that when we voted for the House budget, those Members who voted for it voted for a 3.5-percent increase in this kind of expenditure. If you vote for the committee bill, you will blow that increase into a cocked hat. Even if you vote for the Oxley amendment, which is the best opportunity we will have, you will still be far exceeding the House budget resolution.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to offer my amendment, which is only slightly higher than the Dannemeyer amendment, in the interest of saving time for the body. It obviously would not prevail. I will say, however, in the interest of preserving the House budget, which I thought was too high anyway, that the Members must support the Oxley amendment or, I think, cause a whole black mark on the budgeting process and on our deliberations here. If we do not support the Oxley amendment, it will certainly look like we did not care about our budget nor do we care about the deficit.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding.

This is the first opportunity we have had since the recess to vote against massive deficits. It is as simple as that. The numbers do not lie.

My amendment provides for a 15-percent increase, a very generous increase. The committee amendment involves a 50-percent increase in the first year and an 81-percent increase over 3 years. It is time that we put our money where our mouth is.

When I first got here and before I came here, I always wondered how the Congress over all these years rolled up these kinds of deficits. Now I begin to understand. We have an opportunity here to reverse that trend, and I would simply say that any Member who feels constrained to vote against the amendment presently ought to think twice before he decries budget deficits on the floor of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, voting for the Oxley amendment is the least we should do. Even if that amendment should pass, I will vote against the bill and hope that it proceeds no further. Nevertheless, to cover our shame for having defeated the Dannemeyer amendment, it is imperative that the Oxley amendment be passed.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is critically important for the Members of the House present to recognize some fundamentals about the issue that is before us at this time. One is that we are voting today to appropriate only 20 percent of the systemwide revenue of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. Eighty percent of it comes from private subscriptions, from businesses or from State and local governments, so those that raise the issue of whether or not we are overappropriating funds to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting or suggest that perhaps in some fashion we should send them a message, should be reminded that we are appropriating only 20 percent today or authorizing the expenditure of only 20 percent of the systemwide revenue of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

Additionally, I think it is extremely important for us to understand what in my opinion is a tremendous disingenuousness in presenting to this House the notion that this bill represents a 50-percent increase in funding. It does not represent a 50-percent increase in funding.

In 1981 this Congress under the leadership of the existing occupant of the White House slashed funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting from $220 million per year to $130 million per year, ostensibly for the purpose of carrying out an experiment to see whether or not the system could find private sources of funding that would make up the difference. That experiment was carried out. That experiment failed and we are here today to ask the Congress to restore the previously existing level of funding and no more.

In fact, this bill calls for an amount of funding which is itself 15 percent less than what the Corporation for Public Broadcasting presented to our committee as the minimum necessary to sustain its programming agenda.

I think it is very, very important for this House to reject, first of all, what I consider to be a very unfortunate use of the figures, and second, to cease and to reject as representatives of the American public this unceasing assault on public education, unceasing assault on education of the public through television, that continues to come from the leadership of the minority.

We ask that public broadcasting be restored to the minimum survival levels necessary to carry it forward as has been determined by the Bipartisan Temporary Commission on Alternative Public Financing, that was well served by my colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT], and by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] as well.

I call upon the House in my remarks today simply to reject what I consider to be a disingenuous use of the figures, to recognize that this is not a 50-percent increase. This is a restoration to the original levels of funding that is necessary to make this corporation viable and have continued success in terms of educating the public.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. BRYANT. I yield.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for what he has just pointed out. What is the old phrase? "There are lies, damned lies, and statistics."

We have been tossing numbers around. Let me toss some numbers around. In 1984, the authorization was a 38-percent cut from the previous year and it is from that cut that they are extrapolating their figures. If you take the 1983 appropriation, not the 1984, the point I am making is that these percentages change depending on what you use as your base figures. If you use the authorization of 1983, there has been a 3.8, less than 4 percent increase every year. In fact, the total increase over that period of time is only 9 percent.

What the other side is using, they are using the figures after the Draconian 38-percent cut that occurred in 1984.

Very frankly, the figures in the committee bill, the figures that exist, I think this is very revealing, the figures that are contained in this bill are the figures that have been commonly referred to as we have gone through the legislative process as the Goldwater figures.

Mr. BRYANT. That is correct.

Mr. SWIFT. They are the figures that came out of the Senate in June. These are what we have constantly considered the Goldwater figures. They are hardly radical, particularly coming from the senior Senator from Arizona.

So I completely agree with the gentleman. The figures have been sorely abused here on the floor. We are talking about a very modest increase.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his remarks and would simply add also that once we have restored the level of funding that was cut in 1981 by passing this bill today unamended, the amount of increase per year after that amounts to only 6 percent a year, again a very rational and very reasonable figure which is I am afraid not well represented, to say the least, by the statements of the proponents of the pending amendment.

I strongly urge the Members of the House to defeat the Oxley amendment and to pass this bill unamended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

(At the request of Mr. NIELSON of Utah, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BRYANT was allowed to proceed for an additional 2 minutes.)

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYANT. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, in response to the comments that have been made by the two gentlemen who just spoke in reference to the numbers I gave, it is not a question of where we would like to have been and where we were in 1981 when these figures were passed. It is where we are right now. From 162 to 238 is a 47-percent increase, as I indicated.

It is true that if you had continued in 1981 with that same figure, they would be higher now, but that is not where we are now. We are at 162 with the supplemental and this goes to 238 and I think that is an increase that is more than we can stand.

Mr. BRYANT. Well, Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I woud simply say that I would prefer to think in terms of where we would have been today with public broadcasting had it not been for the Draconian cuts that took place in 1981. I prefer to look at it that way. The fact is that we would be today in a situation where we had a strong and viable Corporation for Public Broadcasting instead of one that is stumbling.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle will listen briefly, because sometimes things appear differently from what they actually are. In this case, the numbers appear different from what they are.

Over the last 2 years, I spent a good deal of time on the Temporary Commission for Alternative Financing on Public Broadcasting. The members of the Temporary Commission from this House were Congressman SWIFT and myself. We went to that job with the task of trying to figure out how we could finance public broadcasting. Twenty percent of the money comes from the Federal Government, most comes from local governments, State governments and from private solicitation.

Now, people may ask themselves why are we asking for these increases in support for public broadcasting? It is not because anybody wants to come up here and try to defend substantial increases in authorizations for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989. It is because we tried to find alternative ways to finance this system and we came up short. We spent 2 years looking at ways in which we could lease out public broadcasting facilities so that others could come in on commercial enterprises, use those facilities to make commercials or to do some kind of film making.

We looked at ways in which the public broadcasting facilities could provide other services. We looked at advertising. Some of you may recall that I was the primary advocate of some kind of advertising on public broadcasting when we last debated this measure.

We had an experiment during which a number of stations considered advertising, but all those efforts came up short. We could raise some money, additional money for public broadcasting, but not enough to meet the needs.

Now, the bottom line, Mr. Chairman, is that the need is not at your local stations, although they may have some need, but most of them can keep themselves afloat. The need is for the production of the programming that is broadcast on those local stations. In Iowa we have a fine facility. We are able to meet our local needs, but what are we going to put on the air? It is the programs that come from the stations in Boston, in New York, and other places.

Unless we provide some funding, those programs are not going to be produced. I do not care how much your State government or your local government or your friends organizations raise for public broadcasting, they are not going to have the resources to have good programming on the air.

Ladies and gentlemen, that is what this is about. We have made a solid effort in this House to find alternative ways to finance this system after we cut the system 38 percent and we have made a solid effort to do that and we failed to come up with alternative methods.

It is irresponsible, in my judgment, for us now to then turn around and say well, even though we failed to come up with the alternative method, we are still going to maintain the spending cuts because if you do that you are going to have a solid public broadcasting system.

So very truthfully, with all respect to my colleagues who are standing on the principle of fiscal responsibility, which I, too, like to embrace, it is fiscally irresponsible to cut this system in a way which throws out what we have gained so far and which makes the facilities which we have built virtually useless because we do not have the programming to put on them which undercuts the private sector efforts that are needed in order to finance most of this system, which leaves our States hanging high and dry supporting facilities with nothing to broadcast over those facilities.

So if you are interested in having something decent on the air, the small amount of money that we are putting up here is going to keep something decent on the air and make all of that other investment worthwhile. That is why we have to spend a little time arguing about this because you need to understand we cut substantially. We tried it and it did not work. We are now going back to the levels of funding we had before, no big increases, going back to where we were before, and we are at the same time trying to extend and improve this system so that we can use it for educational purposes and use it for the other purposes which have made public broadcasting so widely accepted and ever increasingly accepted in our country.

Mr. WIRTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAUKE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] has made the case for public broadcasting and against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY]. I would join with my colleague in urging all Members to vote no on the Oxley amendment and then to vote yes on final passage.

I thank the gentleman for yielding and for his great help.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. TAUKE was allowed to proceed for 30 additional seconds.)

Mr. TAUKE. I might just point out one more thing for my colleagues on this side, and that is that the other body has already passed this bill with these figures. These figures were brought to the forefront by Senator GOLDWATER after he, too, looked at this issue. It came out of our subcommittee with strong bipartisan support. It came out of the full committee with strong bipartisan support.

I think people ought to recognize that those who have studied the issue most closely realize that this is not any big increase in funding for public broadcasting, that it is trying to maintain a system with minimal Federal assistance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

REPEAL OF THE UNRELATED BUSINESS INCOME TAX PENALTY

SEC. 5. Section 396(k) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 396(k)) is amended by striking out paragraph (8) and by redesignating paragraphs (9) and (10) as paragraphs (8) and (9), respectively.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GLICKMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5541) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to extend certain authorizations of appropriations contained in such act, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 521, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if a rollcall vote is taken on the bill now pending, the votes ordered on suspension of the rules, H.R. 1580 and H.R. 5616, be taken by no more than 5-minute votes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. LOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to object, just to clarify for all the Members what is being requested here, it is just that we have a 5-minute vote on the two suspensions now pending; is that correct?

Mr. FOLEY. That is correct.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. That is the case if there is a rollcall on this bill.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the Members that this is a 15-minute vote followed by two 5-minute votes.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 302, nays 91, answered "present" 1, not voting 39, as follows:

□ 1740

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1146) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide for the revocation of the airman certificates and for additional penalties for the transportation by aircraft of controlled substances, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman if he has cleared this with the minority and what arrangements they have agreed to.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this has been cleared with the minority, and they are well aware of this request.

Mr. McEWEN. As a member of the subcommittee, I regret that I was not informed.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1146

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Aviation Drug-Trafficking Control Act".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 609 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1429) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"TRANSPORTATION, DISTRIBUTION, OR OTHER ACTIVITIES RELATED TO CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES

"(c)(1) The Administrator shall issue an order revoking the airman certificates of any person upon conviction of such person for any felony violation of a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than a law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance) if the Administrator determines that (A) an aircraft was used in connection with the commission of the offense and (B) such person knowingly either served as an airman in connection with the offense or was on board the aircraft in connection with the offense.

"(2) The Administrator shall issue an order revoking the airman certificates of any person if the Administrator determines that—

"(A) the airman has engaged in an activity which he knew, or had reasonable cause to know, was intended to distribute, import, or export a controlled substance;

"(B) an aircraft was used in such activity or to facilitate such activity;

"(C) the airman either served as an airman in connection with such activity or was on board the aircraft in connection with such activity;

"(D) the controlled substance was not part of the legitimate offical supplies of such aircraft;

"(E) the controlled substance was not part of the cargo entered in the manifest of an aircraft engaged in the usual course of business of a common on contract carrier certificated to carry cargo under the provisions of this Act; and

"(F) the airman (or his employer) was not authorized to distribute, import, or export (as the case may be) the controlled substance under any State or Federal law or under the authority of any State or Federal agency.

For the purpose of subparagraph (F) of this paragraph, if the Administrator determines that the airman (or his employer) was not registered to distribute, import, or export (as the case may be) the controlled substance in question pursuant to section 303 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 823) or section 1007 of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 957), the burden of proof shall be on the airman to establish that he (or his employer) was authorized to distribute, import, or export (as the case may be) such controlled substance under any State or Federal law or under the authority of any State or Federal agency. This paragraph is intended to reach activity occurring within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, or without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, or both.

"(3) Prior to revoking an airman certificate under this subsection, the Administrator shall advise the holder thereof of the charges or any reasons relied upon by the Administrator for his proposed action and shall provide the holder of such certificate an opportunity to answer any charges and be heard as to why such certificate should not be revoked. Any person whose certificate is revoked by the Administrator pursuant to this subsection may appeal the Adminstrator's order to the Board and the Board shall, after notice and a hearing on the record, affirm, amend, modify, or reverse the Administrator's order. In the conduct of its hearings, the Board shall not be bound by findings of fact of the Administrator. The filing of an appeal with the Board shall stay the effectiveness of the Administrator's order unless the Administrator advises the Board that safety in air commerce or air transportation requires the immediate effectiveness of his order, in which event the order shall remain effective and the Board shall finally dispose of the appeal within 60 days after being so advised by the Administrator. A person whose certificate is revoked by the Board's order may obtain judicial review of said order under the provisions of section 1006. The filing of an application for such judicial review shall not stay the effectiveness of the Board's order.

"(4) In any proceeding pursuant to this subsection, the findings of an appropriate State or Federal court as to any element of proof required by this subsection shall be conclusive and neither the Administrator nor the Board shall have the authority to review such issue.

"(5) In any proceeding pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection—

"(A) neither the Administrator nor the Board shall be required, or have the authority, to determine if any activity constitutes a violation of any State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance;

"(B) no part of the record of such proceeding shall be admitted as evidence in any State or Federal criminal proceeding; and

"(C) neither the Administrator nor the Board shall have the authority to revoke the airman certificate of any person who has been the subject of a criminal indictment or information concerning the activity related to a controlled substance and who has been acquitted in a State or Federal court of all charges related to such activity.

"(6) For the purposes of this subsection, the terms 'controlled substance' and 'distribute' shall have the same meaning given such terms by section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802) and the terms 'import' and 'export' shall have the same meaning given such terms by section 1001 of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951).".

(b) That portion of the table of contents contained in the first section of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 which appears under the side heading:

"Sec. 609. Amendment, suspension, and revocation of certificates."

is amended by adding at the end thereof:

"(c) Transportation, distribution, or other activity related to controlled substances.".

SEC. 3. Section 602(b) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1422(b)) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(b)" and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Administrator shall not issue an airman certificate to any person whose airman certificate has been revoked pursuant to subsection (c) of section 609 of this title during the 5-year period beginning on the date of such revocation.

"(B) The Administrator may issue an airman certificate to any such person before the end of such 5-year period (but not before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of such revocation) if, in addition to the findings required by paragraph (1), the Administrator determines (i) that revocation of the certificate for such 5-year period would be excessive considering the nature of the offense or the act committed and the burden which revocation places on such person, or (ii) that revocation of the certificate for such 5-year period would not be in the public interest. The determinations under clauses (i) and (ii) of the preceding sentence shall be within the discretion of the Administrator and any such determination or failure to make such a determination shall not be subject to administrative or judicial review.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this paragraph, in any case in which the Administrator has revoked the airman certificate of any person pursuant to section 601(c) (1) or (2) as a result of any activity related to a controlled substance and such person is subsequently acquitted of all charges related to such activity in any criminal indictment or information arising from such activity, the Administrator shall issue a certificate to such person if such person is otherwise qualified to serve as an airman under the provisions of this Act.".

SEC. 4. Section 501(e) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1401(e)) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(e)" and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The Administrator shall issue an order revoking the certificate of registration issued to an owner under this section for an aircraft and each other certificate of registration held by such owner under this section, if the Administrator determines that—

"(i) such aircraft has been used in an activity, or to facilitate an activity that is a felony violation of any State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than any law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance); and

"(ii) the use of the aircraft was permitted by such owner who knew, or had reasonable cause to know, that the aircraft was intended to be used for activity described in clause (i) of this subparagraph.

For purposes of this paragraph, an owner of an aircraft who is not an individual shall be considered to know, or to have reasonable cause to know, the intended use of an aircraft only is a majority of the individuals who control such owner or who are involved in forming the major policy of such owner knew, or had reasonable cause to have known, of such intended use.

"(B) Prior to revoking any certificate of registration under this subsection the Administrator shall advise the holder thereof of the charges or any reasons relied upon by the Administrator for his proposed action and shall provide the holder of the certificate of registration an opportunity to answer any charges and be heard as to why such certificate should not be revoked. Any person whose certificate of registration is revoked by the Administrator pursuant to this subsection may appeal the Administrator's order to the Board and the Board shall, after notice and a hearing on the record, affirm, amend, modify, or reverse the Administrator's order. In the conduct of its hearings, the Board shall not be bound by findings of fact of the Administrator. The filing of an appeal with the Board shall stay the effectiveness of the Administrator's order unless the Administrator advises the Board that safety in air commerce or air transportation requires the immediate effectiveness of his order, in which event the order shall remain effective and the Board shall finally dispose of the appeal within 60 days after being so advised by the Administrator. The person whose certificate of registration is revoked by the Board's order may obtain judicial review of said order under the provisions of section 1006. The filing of an application for such judicial review shall not stay the effectiveness of the Board's order.

"(C) In any proceeding under this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'controlled substance' shall have the same meaning given such term by section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802);

"(ii) no part of the record of such proceeding shall be admitted as evidence in any State or Federal criminal proceeding;

"(iii) neither the Administrator nor the Board shall have the authority to revoke any certificate of registration if the owner of such aircraft has been the subject of a criminal indictment or information concerning the alleged illegal activity related to a controlled substance and has been acquitted in a State or Federal court of all such charges; and

"(iv) the findings of an appropriate State or Federal court as to any element of proof required by such paragraph shall be conclusive and neither the Administrator nor the Board shall have the authority to review such issue.

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph, in any case in which the Administrator has revoked the certificate of registration of any person as a result of any activity related to controlled substance and such person is subsequently acquitted of all charges related to such activity in any criminal indictment or information arising from such activity, the Administrator shall issue a certificate of registration to such person if such person is otherwise qualified for such a certificate under the provision of this Act.

"(E) Except as provided in subparagraph (F), the Administrator shall not issue a certificate of registration to any person who has had a certificate revoked pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph during the 5-year period beginning on the date of such revocation.

"(F) The Administrator may issue a certificate of registration for an aircraft to any such person before the end of such 5-year period (but not before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of such revocation) if the Administrator determines that such aircraft is otherwise eligible for registration under this section and (i) that revocation of the certificate for such 5-year period would be excessive considering the nature of the offense or the act committed and the burden which revocation places on such person, or (ii) that revocation of the certificate for such 5-year period would not be in the public interest. The determinations under clauses (i) and (ii) of the preceding sentence shall be within the discretion of the Administrator and any such determinaiton or failure to make such a determination shall not be subject to administrative or judicial review.".

SEC. 5. Section 902(b) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1472(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(b) Any person who" and inserting in lieu thereof "(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), any person who";

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I just ask a question of the distinguished gentleman.

It will require a two-thirds vote to pass any of the measures listed by the gentleman?

Mr. PERKINS. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this the same equal access bill that would allow cults to meet in our public schools?

Mr. PERKINS. This is not the same equal access bill.

Let me say this is the amendment that came over from the Senate that we are proposing to take and no cults anywhere along the line are allowed in this school bill.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Would this be permissive of religious services taking place in the schools?

Mr. PERKINS. That is a hard question to define, religious services taking place. The purpose of it is to give religious students that belong to that high school and no other high school the right to participate in religious services and no outsider is allowed.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Could the chairman describe what a ceremony is?

Mr. PERKINS. If no one but the students are in charge of the service, no official of the school or anyone else except the schools can supervise. If something goes wrong, they will close the meetings out. If an outsider is brought in, he cannot be brought in on a regular basis. The bill makes that perfectly clear.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Insomuch as this would permit school supervision of religious ceremonies taking place——

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield.

Mr. GOODLING. The term "religious ceremony" is not a part of this Senate amendment in any way, shape or form. It does not allow religious ceremonies at all.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Does the bill preclude religious services or religious prayers from taking place in the schools?

Mr. GOODLING. It precludes it.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Could the gentleman point out where it might preclude that?

Mr. GOODLING. It basically allows for an activity period before school or after school, as any other activity would be meeting, where a study group would be studying, whatever that may be, whether it is a democratic way of life or whether it is Republican politics or whatever it may be. It does not permit religious ceremonies.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Would the sponsor of the bill be willing to state in a colloquy during the consideration of the bill that this would not permit prayer in school and that this would not permit religious services to take place in public school buildings?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, as the sponsor of the original bill, which this amendment is not, and I might add that I had to ponder long and hard about whether I would support the Senate passed amendment, because I believe that it greatly waters down the original intent of the equal access bill, that it does not allow or prohibit school districts from disallowing the kind of religious activity to which the gentleman refers, but it does provide that a school district can set aside this limited forum for before classes and after classes where students cannot be discriminated against if they so wish to gather for purposes of reading Bible verses or praying; so that kind of activity would be protected under the provisions of this amendment, but it in no way compares to the kind of religious services or the religious activity that I think the gentleman is concerned about.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Let me be specific. If a student organization wanted to conduct a Catholic mass in a public school building, would this prohibit that?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I would like to hear the sponsor's answer first.

Mr. BONKER. Well, in my judgment, it would prohibit that kind of activity, whether it be mass or any kind of religious service. The intent of the sponsor of the bill is that if several students want to get together for the purpose of reading the Bible or reading the Koran or any other kind of religious document, they cannot be disallowed from doing so either before the school hours begin or after the school hours.

Mr. ACKERMAN. The gentleman is saying they cannot be disallowed from having it? That means that under this bill that would be permitted?

Mr. BONKER. What I am saying is that I do not think anything in this bill disallows school district authorities from prohibiting that kind of activity.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GOODLING. I would like to quote from the Senate side: "Non-school persons may not direct, conduct, control or regularly attend activities of student groups."

So of course there is no way you could conduct a mass or direct any religious ceremony, because there would be no priest, no rabbi, no protestant minister, nobody of that nature that could participate in any way, shape or form.

□ 1800

Mr. ACKERMAN. That is presumptuous, I would think.

Mr. GOODLING. How can they have a mass if they are not directed?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I have reserved the right to object. There is certainly the possibility that within student groups, even if it might be completely student run groups, that you might have various leaders of different persuasions. Not every religious group has a requirement that one be a high school graduate in order to conduct services or to have any particular degree.

Mr. BONKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BONKER. I would add that the Senate-passed amendment does provide that the meeting cannot materially and substantially interfere with the orderly conduct of educational activities within the school. And I would presume that if you are going to get involved in church-type activity that that may well be disruptive of regular school activity.

Mrs. BURTON of California. Would the gentleman from New York give me a moment?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I will be delighted to yield to my colleague from California.

Mrs. BURTON of California. I thank the gentleman.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER] or my chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, or whoever knows the answer: What is the law today? What can we do in the schools today, prior to this bill being worked on, what can we do?

Mr. BONKER. Will the gentleman from New York yield so that I can respond to the gentlewoman from California?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I will be delighted to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BONKER. I would point out that currently there are no definitive guidelines, at least Federal guidelines, for school districts in this area. The 1962 Supreme Court decision addressed specifically the issue of school prayer. That is where in a classroom school authorities would conduct or instruct in terms of prayer or religious activity. That is what is explicitly disallowed by the Constitution.

The Supreme Court did not address this particular problem; that is, of students coming together for purposes on their own time of having prayer or any kind of Bible reading or whatever. That is one of the reasons why we have the proposal before the Congress, is because school districts have varying policies.

The fact is that most school districts in this country today have a policy of tolerance; that is, they allow this activity. That is in a majority of the school districts today. They allow the kind of activity about which the gentleman is concerned.

What we are trying to do is to build in some consistency not only for the school districts but for the various lower courts who have decided in various ways on this particular issue.

But I think that what we have here is not only a means of establishing definitive guidelines and consistency, but we also have in the draft a number of prohibitions against school instructed or school directed religious activities. So I think in that sense this is a very progressive measure.

Mr. GOODLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOODLING. I would like to echo what the Congressman has just said. The purpose for bringing the legislation before the Congress was specifically the fact that no one seemed to know exactly what they were allowed to do or were not allowed to do.

For instance, in most high school districts there is a Hi-Y club during club activities. I do not know of anyone in the United States that has objected to a Hi-Y club.

In many schools there is Bible club during the activity period.

The Supreme Court ruled that you cannot discriminate on the postsecondary level. They have not had the case before them. Some of the lower courts have ruled on both sides of the issue, which becomes very conflicting. There are conflicting decisions.

We had the Williamsport decision which says, yes. We had the Lubbock which said, no. We had Little Axe and that decision said, yes. We had the Brandon decision that said, no.

So we are trying to clarify that particular issue at this time.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Could I ask you to possibly explain to me why this bill does not specifically prohibit the use of school buildings for religious services and school prayer, if you are interested in setting those guidelines.

Mr. BONKER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield.

Mr. BONKER. Many school districts today have a policy of renting out their facilities to various churches that otherwise do not have facilities and that is done on a rental basis and has nothing to do with the curriculum. But if you were to build that provision into this statute it would, indeed, be interfering with local school authorities in trying to make available the space on a Sunday, for instance, that has nothing whatsoever to do with its educational program, but happens to be a nice revenue factor for the school districts.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me say one thing to our distinguished colleague from New York. There has been confusion throughout the country, even confusion in adjacent counties in eastern Kentucky about this problem, and it has been brought about because of the Supreme Court decision where college students in the Missouri case has this right of equal access, and this is just trying to give some guidelines to the school people throughout the Nation, not bringing, not trying to bring any specific religion, but where school buildings are used for other activities.

I used a school building in the last week on eight occasions for flood control political meetings. We have school buildings in some of our large counties where you do not have a courthouse within 70 or 80 miles, and it is for the convenience of these youngsters that go to that particular school. And insofar as defining services, that is very hard to do, I would think. Each of us may have a different thought about it.

But we provide, and the gentleman raised the objection in the committee originally, that to reduce the number to two, and they can get in there and conduct a service, and that is what the Senate bill does here. And I think you and I both know when we try to define a service it is almost impossible.

But this thing has a moral value to these youngsters, these high school students, to get together, discuss their religion, and that is I think something that is very worthy.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I think that there is a clear difference between using a public school building for educational purposes and telling people what to do in cases of flood control and other things that are in the public interest. But religion is something that is in one's private interests, and to make a public school building available, and everything that I have heard here today tells me that the intent is to be permissive of having prayer in our schools and tolerating religious services in our schools. I do not think that that is the purpose of public education or public school buildings.

Mr. PERKINS. If we were interfering with public education the gentleman would have a point. But we are not interfering in any way with public education.

These schools are making their rooms accessible to garden clubs, horseback riding clubs, all kinds of civic organizations, political meetings. In my district the school buildings, that is where I held my political meetings. We do not have any problems working it out with the school superintendent in these rural counties where we hold our political meetings in the school buildings. And I do not see a thing in the world wrong here with these high school youngsters being afforded equal access for a good moral purpose, regardless of what our religion happens to be.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Nobody has objections to youngsters doing things for good moral purposes. But there is still a finite, albeit very important difference between studying and teaching about religion and the actual practicing of religion.

Mr. GOODLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. I would just like to assure the gentleman from New York that there is nothing in this bill that does anything differently than public schools have been doing for 100 years. All we are saying is that since the Supreme Court has not acted at this point, since there is controversy in the lower courts, there should be some guidelines for the school district so they know where they stand.

Most of them are continuing to operate today just as this legislation says they are allowed to operate. So we are not asking for anything new. We are not asking for anything more. In fact, we are probably limiting what they have been doing at this particular point for the last 100 years.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I am sure the gentleman would agree there are things we have been doing for 100 years and even 1,000 years that are not just and that are not right and that we would like to see changed. But that really is not the issue.

My question is, Is there anything in this bill that prohibits the use of public school buildings for prayer or for religious services?

Mr. GOODLING. This is strictly a religion tolerance bill, period.

But let me say also I think it passed the other body something like 88 to 11.

Mr. ACKERMAN. That does not mean it is right.

Mr. GOODLING. It has Mr. KENNEDY, for instance, and others, Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. TSONGAS and some of them.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I have heard of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I will be delighted to yield.

□ 1810

Mr. SEIBERLING. I have asked the gentleman to yield because this very issue came up in the school district of the city of Akron, OH, several years ago and the school board, with its counsel, worked out a set of guidelines for allowing students to conduct meetings and have religious discussions on school property, but not part of the regular curriculum, not in school instruction classrooms, but in other parts of the school buildings that were set aside for noninstructional purposes.

The Akron guidelines are very similar to the Senate bill. The two principal differences are that the Akron guidelines do not permit any faculty to be present at such meetings and they also prohibit any outside people from coming to the meetings.

And they also say you cannot have such meetings in the classrooms, themselves.

In looking at the proposed legislation which the Senate bill represents, it seems to me that the Akron guidelines could be continued identically, even under the Senate bill, the only exception being that if other groups are permitted to advertise meetings on school bulletin boards, for example, then religious groups would have to be given the same right, which the Akron guidelines do not allow them to do.

Unless someone can come up with a very clear indication that the bill, as it is proposed, violates the Constitution in some explicit way, I think that this is something that is compatible with practices that have been developed in an actual case by a school board that is very concerned about following constitutional requirements and that it does not interfere with what I conceive to be the proper separation of religion and the State.

And I might add, I voted against the original Perkins-Bonker bill.

Mr. ACKERMAN. There is nothing wrong with individual school districts coming up with their own interpretations without having the will of the Congress forced down their throats. That is exactly in my opinion what we would be doing here.

There is also again the tremendous difference between the study and the practice of a particular subject. This bill would be, and nobody has stated otherwise, absolutely permissive of the Ku Klux Klan claiming they are a religion and meeting on the school grounds and doing a lot of things that some people think objectionable despite the fact that they have been done for 100 years.

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman will yield, it is my understanding that the bill would sanction the right of any school administration to prohibit activities on their property that they consider are not conducive to good order and to proper exercise of constitutional rights.

So if the Ku Klux Klan wanted to meet in a school building, it seems to me this does not give them any right that the school board could not override.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As a matter of fact, the legislation specifically says nothing in this act should be construed to limit the authority of the school, its agents or employees, to maintain order and discipline on school premises, to protect the well-being of students and faculty and to assure the attendance at such meetings voluntary.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I am not suggesting as necessary that the religious groups, the real damage they do is in physical violence, but it is in the kind of violence that they do to human dignity in some of the things they believe in.

Mr. GOODLING. You mentioned Klan and I think violence.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes, I did, because I wanted to mention an extreme case, but there are other cases which are more extreme.

Mr. GOODLING. This bill is protected against the Klan and such other groups.

The SPEAKER. Is there an objection?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes; there is. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears an objection.

MAKING IN ORDER ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 25, 1984, OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER, CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1310

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 554) making in order on Wednesday, July 25, 1984, or any day thereafter, consideration of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 554

Resolved, That it shall be in order on Wednesday, July 25, 1984, or any day thereafter to consider at any time, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, the following: (1) a motion to suspend the rules, to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor and the Judiciary from further consideration of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310, and to concur in title VIII of the Senate amendment, entitled "The Equal Access Act", to said bill, and such motion shall be debatable for not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the motion and a Member opposed thereto; and (2) if such motion has been adopted, a motion to suspend the rules and to concur in titles I through VII of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310. Neither such motion shall be subject to a demand for a second. If both such motions to suspend the rules are adopted, the House shall be considered to have agreed to the entire Senate amendment to H.R. 1310.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second is ordered.

Under the rules, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY] rise?

Mr. FOLEY. For a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the motion now pending be postponed until the first order of business tomorrow, July 25.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the debate also be postponed?

Mr. FOLEY. Just the vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do so just to inquire of the gentleman from Washing whether or not——

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the gentleman will yield to me and I can clarify it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. I would like to revise my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate and the vote on the motion now pending be postponed until the first order of business tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would it be my understanding that this would occur prior to the call of Calendar Wednesday, thereby still preserving the Calendar Wednesday option tomorrow?

Mr. FOLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The matter is postponed to the first order of business of the day tomorrow.

ARKANSAS PAYS TRIBUTE TO GERALDINE FERRARO

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks, and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I just returned from my home State of Arkansas last night where I encountered overwhelming support for the nomination of GERALDINE FERRARO for the position of Vice President on the Democratic ticket. I believe that in my State the pride of our people has been rekindled because it was Arkansas that elected the first woman to the U.S. Senate in 1932, and she was twice reelected. Feature publications such as the following from the Arkansas Democrat about the life of Hattie Caraway, the first woman U.S. Senator, are appearing throughout Arkansas.

We in our State learned a long time ago that women are "half the sky" and they can contribute in medicine, in law, in politics, and in business. We welcome you, GERRY, to Arkansas. I will be standing there to greet you and to introduce you to our wonderful people so that they can know you as we know you here in the House. And you will see in November that they love you.

HATTIE CARAWAY

A WOMAN'S PLACE IS IN THE HOUSE (AND SENATE)

(By Patrick Kelly)

Above all others, there was one compelling reason for Hattie Wyatt Caraway to run for the Senate:

She needed the money.

Her husband, Sen. Thaddeus Caraway, had died in 1931, leaving her with three sons, a mansion near Washington, and little else. When Gov. Harvey Parnell asked her to serve the year remaining in Thaddeus' term, it was, at least in Parnell's mind, guaranteed that she would not run for election to a full term.

But after a year to mull it over, Miss Hattie changed her mind. Thad had left her virtually bankrupt and she had no marketable skills, so she ran for the Senate and was twice elected—thrice, if you count a special election for the remaining year in Thad's term.

Hattie Caraway was a frumpy woman, about whom it was written that she should be expected to start shelling peas in midconversation. A good, Christian woman—Methodist, to be precise—whose white fudge with walnuts was said to be wonderful.

Yet, unknowingly, she was predecessor of vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro and other modern women in only the mildest way: She was there in the '30s and '40s, and was acceptable to the men of the time with her housewifely, homespun ways. She may not have paved the way for today's feminists in her thinking, but just by being there, and being the first, she created a mold, albeit changed now, that allowed women into Congress.

Born in rural western Tennessee in 1878, Hattie Ophelia Wyatt met Thad Caraway after her graduation from Dickson (Tenn.) Normal College and settled with him near Jonesboro in 1902. He became a thriving young attorney and she became a housewife. Her only legacy from the early days in Jonesboro was the cry of "Mrs. Caraway" on the street. It alerted women to crooked stockings and sagging slips.

In 1912, Thad was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives and in 1920, he became Arkansas' junior senator. He was junior to Joe T. Robinson, the one-time vice presidential candidate who remains one of the state's favorite sons. Upon Caraway's death and Mrs. Caraway's rise to the Senate, there was jest among Arkansans that Mrs. Caraway would become Robinson's other vote in the Senate, but that was not to be.

Caraway died on November 6, 1931. Gov. Parnell quickly organized the Democratic State Committee, and Mrs. Caraway was appointed (actually, elected, in a rubber-stamp sort of way) for the term's remainder. She had some opposition from Frank Pace, who said that a woman had no business serving in the Senate. It was a philosophy Thad Caraway would have held, but that did not stop his widow.

Daisy Rhea Abbott, now 92 and living in Magnolia, was a member of the Democratic State Committee in 1931. She recalled that "the day after Mr. Caraway died, Mr. Parnell called me and said, 'Mrs. Rhea, we want to get this place for Mrs. Caraway. Mr. Caraway was a good senator, but he was not a good businessman. He was in debt.'

"Put my vote down for Mrs. Caraway," she said, and eventually became the deciding vote when a man approached her in the lobby of the Marion Hotel in Little Rock just prior to the committee's meeting.

"When I got to the Marion Hotel and went into the lobby, it was full of people," she recalled. "A man called me to one side and says, 'You're Mrs. Rhea?' I said yes. He said, 'Are you committed? Have you pledged your vote to Mrs. Caraway?' I said yes. He said, 'Any chance of you changing? You're the last one. It hinges on your vote. If Mr. Pace had one more (vote), it'd be his. He would have it.' "

"I said no. I told Mr. Parnell in the beginning that I was for Mrs. Caraway, and I wasn't going to change my vote."

Later, Charles H. Brough, who had been governor of Arkansas from 1917 to 1921, told her she should have said, "What's your price?"

Pace was a lawyer originally from Harrision who had served for a time as that district's prosecutor and as a minor federal bureaucrat tending the railroads. His only mistake in wanting Thad Caraway's seat was in not asking the governor first.

Going into the Senate, Mrs. Caraway had one blessing: Garrett Whiteside, her late husband's secretary, the predecessor to both an administrative and legislative assistant.

"A lot of people said that Garrett Whiteside was really the Senator," said Mrs. Abbott, "that she just did what Garrett Whiteside told her."

"There's no doubt that she consulted with him and depended upon him quite a lot," said U.S. District Judge Oren Harris, who served in the House of Representaives while Mrs. Caraway was in the Senate. "But she was a woman of a great deal of independence, and she was stubborn, too."

"Mrs. Caraway Darns Socks When Day In Senate Is Done" read one headline from her early career. To which she added, "last night I hemmed two napkins." It was taken quite seriously, this mother-and-homemaker line, seriously enough that Mrs. Caraway felt the need to publicly thank Fannie, "our colored maid, (who) takes such good care of us that I take little thought of the machinery of running the house."

Her press clippings show that she was very much the lady, albeit an odd one. Most of it is fairly gray, but there are pieces like the one in which she gave a question-and-answer interview on the subject of parachutes in passenger planes.

She introduced a bill to require mandatory parachutes on all commercial aircraft almost every year she was in the Senate.

"Mark my words," she said. "You'll see the day when parachutes will be standard equipment on passenger planes."

The Civil Aeronautics Board and the Department of Commerce came out against the bill with three points: The usefulness of parachutes to untrained people was "somewhat questionable," passenger planes were not well-adapted to the use of parachutes; and the speed and unexpectedness with which accidents occur would make escape impossible.

To which Mrs. Caraway replied, "They've got a door, haven't they?"

She did acknowledge that there was some truth to the CAB's and Department of Commerce's findings, but said, "there have been some crashes were parachutes would have saved lives—particularly when the plane was unable to land because of fog or other conditions and ran out of gas—and there will be other cases of this kind."

The CAB and Department of Commerce won that one, but only after Mrs. Caraway introduced it 12 out of 13 years she served in the Senate. At the very least, it became the longest/lasting bill of her career and, with a few exceptions, the most important one to her.

Mrs. Caraway was not much on introducing legislation. Probably her most noteworthy legislative involvement was in a bill that successfully kept Arkansas from losing congressional representation in 1941. But throughout her career, she made few speeches, averaging about one a year, and introduced just as few pieces of legislation.

Her first year in the Senate was chronicled in a diary, which has been published under the title "Silent Hattie Speaks" (Diane D. Kincaid, editor; Greenwood Press). Although not published until 1979, it's probable that Mrs. Caraway wrote it for publication in a woman's journal, sort of a woman's eye view of the United States Senate.

A major concern in the diary was what people, especially men in the Senate, were wearing. Much of the diary was written on the Senate floor; apparently appearances were foremost in Mrs. Caraway's mind.

"Sen. Lewis is dressed in a tan shirt with green stripes," she began one entry, "green tie, low-cut vest of creame—looks like linen—Beige Spats. His shirt sleeves are very long, cuff buttons of enamel, black ground with red flowers."

She was also concerned with the price of china, following sales all around Washington for a dish or a saucer. Several years later, in a letter to her son Forrest, she asked if he and his wife had received their wedding gift, a set of Lenox china, then told him it cost her $300. "I only got it in 8 of everything and that came to over $300, so you can see why I'm anxious about it," she wrote, asking for confirmation of its receipt.

She was a very price conscious woman, her diary shows. "Went to office et a sandwich and cup of coffee (15 cts.)," she recorded. Apparently, the "et" is written in jest.

When she was bored, when the tedium of the Senate floor got to be too much for her, she would write poetry. Some of it is rather clever. This one is not:

"To run and run and never fret
Is worth it tho you may not get
The breaks you wanted, nor the place
You still may live by God's good grace.
And when your life and work are done
Find tho' you lost—you also won."

She added, "From the 'Jingles of a Jennet,' Written in the Senate."

Sometime during that first year she changed her mind about running for election. In her diary, she said she was doing it for her sons—and to test the waters for women on the national political scene. If this sounded political, whatever fires were burning underneath her were quickly extinguished. There are few references to a movement for women in any of her later letters or speeches.

Virtually everyone back home had expected her to become Joe Robinson's other vote in the Senate. That didn't happen. But neither did she become an extra vote to Sen. Huey Long of Louisiana, who at least once specifically asked for her vote and didn't get it. Nevertheless, she voted along Long's lines more often than along Robinson's.

Long's influence probably did not cause her to run for election, but nevertheless, he became the most influential man, aside from Garrett Whiteside, in her early career. She had become quite enamored with him, if sometimes in a horrified kind of way, as they were assigned seats next to each other in the Senate chamber. He was the bright spot in her day; Mrs. Caraway, in anticipation of his arrival in the Senate, said in her diary that he would "bring color and quite a display of fireworks, I imagine."

Her relationship with Long extended back to her late husband and the friendship they developed as two like-thinkers. Wondering who will escort him to take the Senate's oath of office, Mrs. Caraway wrote that "he had asked Dad (Thad) to do that."

Whatever the reason, he came to Arkansas and helped her win the election, with the understanding that he not publicly trounce Joe T. Robinson from the speaker's dais. He kept his promise. What he had in mind was more a show of strength; he wanted to flex his muscles in a neighboring state to show that his popularity extended past Louisiana, perhaps looking ahead even to the nation in 1936, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt would be up for reelection.

That, of course, was not mentioned. To his followers in Arkansas, Long was there because, he said, "Wall Street interests had their feet on the throat of a defenseless little woman who had the nerve and courage to sit in the Senate and vote against the vested money interests of this nation while the sheriff sold her home because she couldn't pay the mortgage."

The reference was to Calvert Mansion outside Washington, which Thad had bought before his death. It was the most obvious show of Mrs. Caraway's dire financial straits after his death when it was sold at a public auction to pay the mortgage.

Long's "medicine show," as it was called, was a combination revival and political rally—and it worked. It drew an estimated 20,000 people (35,000 by Long's count) at the rally in Little Rock, a smashing windup of what they had done out in the state in 30 other rallies.

Mrs. Caraway was nominated by a landslide. Her six opponents included Charles Brough, the former governor; O. L. Bodenhamer, an El Dorado oil man who had been national commander of the American Legion; William Hutton, the sheriff of Pulaski County and secretary of the state Democratic committee; William Kirby, a former U.S. Senator and, at the time, associate justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court; Vincent Miles, a member of the Democratic National Committee; and Melbourne Martin, a lawyer.

"That Senator Long was invaluable in his efforts on my behalf is well-known," she said following the election. "To him I would deny no need of praise or thanks."

Many considered that an understatement, but Silent Hattie was back in the saddle.

Huey Long fell to an assassin's bullet in 1935. Mrs. Caraway was probably oblivious to what Long really had meant to her in 1932, at least to the degree that she felt she could win an election on her own. This theory wasn't to be tested until 1944, for Homer Adkins stepped in to play election genie for Mrs. Caraway in 1938.

Adkins was then collector of Internal Revenue, which, at that time, meant he was in charge of the Federal Government's operations in Arkansas. He went on to become governor, a later move on the power scale at that time.

Her opponent, John McClellan, then a representative, lambasted Mrs. Caraway for being a do-nothing Senator, acting as the president's rubber-stamp. That held some truth, but it probably helped her as much as hurt her. Roosevelt made a stop in Booneville during the campaign, calling Mrs. Caraway "a friend." That was all that was said, but writers of the day took it to be an endorsement of her senatorial campaign.

McClellan took on the fight with a vengence, sharpening his teeth for later battles. His campaign slogan was "Arkansas needs another man in the Senate," and his campaign schedule was even more grueling than her's had been in those last eight days of the 1932 campaign. In the end, he was hospitalized for exhaustion.

Also in the end, Mrs. Caraway emerged as the victor in name only. Even though she won by some 8,000 votes, it really was Adkins' election, with his control of Arkansas' arm of the federal government.

In a letter to McClellan after his defeat, a supporter wrote, "They knew the only way they could beat you was to steal it, and they had their bunch well-trained, and they did a good (job) of it."

That's not to say, however, that Adkins controlled Mrs. Caraway's vote in the Senate. He may have wanted to, but Mrs. Caraway was just naive enough not to let such a thing enter her mind. The fact that she was a true Roosevelt supporter, whereas McClellan had expressed reservations over some of the president's programs, was apparently enough for Adkins.

On Labor Day, Sept. 5 of 1938, Mrs. Caraway took the time to drop her son, Forrest, a note. Her letters had, in fact, taken the place of her diary, which she didn't bother with after about a year. Before the letters, though, came a period in which she read the newspaper in the Senate chamber—a brouhaha in the press over whether or not she was reading the comics put an end to that, and a start to her letter writing.

Just after the primaries Mrs. Caraway wrote that "the repercussions from the campaign have gradually died away and all is quiet on the Western front. McClellan is in the hospital for a complete rest. I hear that a cousin of his second wife * * * says McClellan told her that the inside of (his) head burned like fire and that he is afraid it will never be right again I'm usually sympathetic, but you know I'm not worrying about him for a second. That man is poison. There is not a trick he didn't try * * *."

Later in the letter, she mentions an acquaintance who was having a problem with boils. "I wish we could wish them on * * * Mrs. McClellan," she wrote.

In her second term, she had developed a finesse of sorts as a legislator, the finesse of a woman who knew her place. She rarely spoke on the Senate floor, hence her nickname, Silent Hattie. But the nickname evoked more than just passing thoughts of Hattie being quiet; as she said, "I leave the speeches for the 95 men in the Senate, most of whom like to talk." She added that "their talk does not change votes."

She was well-studied on topics of legislation, especially as they applied to Arkansans. Her office was known for being efficient at taking care of the needs of home folks. Largely, the credit for this goes to Garrett Whiteside, but Mrs. Caraway had a hand in it, too.

She was a club woman who would have been best off if left as president of the Twentieth Century Club, a ladies' literary society in Jonesboro. But she was in the Senate, and she did the best she could, in her day, of being an effective member who did not rock the boat.

In the election of 1944, Mrs. Caraway was all but left out. Huey Long was dead, Homer Adkins was running against her, and no one had stepped in to replace the spark they had fired. She was only a nominal candidate in what amounted to a race between U.S. Rep. J. William Fulbright and Adkins. She finished fourth in a field of four candidates.

Her closest friends and advisers urged her not to run, but she was undaunted. She tried to run the campaign with the help of Garrett Whiteside. Describing the campaign as pitiful, one Caraway supporter remembered Whiteside working alone at the campaign headquarters, trying to drum up support.

In a political obituary after the election that had found Fulbright the winner, Time magazine remembered her as being the senator outside whose "door in the mahogany-and-marble Senate Office Building stood a little row of milk bottles." It went on to say that, by the time of the election of 1938, "most housewives in Arkansas had received letters, often enclosing Government canning bulletins. from 'Miss Hattie,'"

Time ended the article by saying, "The political career of Hattie Caraway * * * was over."

After her defeat, she was appointed by Roosevelt to serve on the Federal Employees' Compensation Appeals Board. She resigned shortly before her death from a stroke on Dec. 21, 1950.

She never forgot what happened in 1944. "She was bitter toward many of her best, sincerest friends," recalled one family friend. "She felt they hadn't done enough."

DEBT CRISIS IN THE THIRD WORLD

(Mr. DE LA GARZA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, we read very often these days that international bankers are worried about the debt crisis in the Third World.

We've been reading about it in the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times and the Washington Post. And if they tell us that bankers are concerned, I'm sure it's true.

I have only one complaint about this, Mr. Speaker. I think that we ought to be hearing more about this problem outside the boundaries of Wall Street, Washington, and Chicago. We should also be looking at the problem in towns and cities all across this country where agriculture is a vital part of the economy.

The fact is that if we have a serious debt problem in the Third World—and we do—then the fallout could affect more than just a few big international banks. It could affect farmers and others in agriculture in almost every part of this country.

We know that when the Third World is in a debt crisis, we can look for two developments affecting agriculture—and both of them can spell trouble.

First, we can expect developing countries to look for every conceivable chance to increase raw material exports to help earn exchange needed to pay their debts.

I want to emphasize that I am not criticizing the natural development of agriculture in other countries on a sound economic basis. But none of us would want to see cases where other countries push the production of crops which may offer a short-run payoff at the expense of solid, lasting progress in meeting their own development needs.

The second troublesome prospect lies in what a debt crisis abroad can do to our own prospects for expanding exports.

All through the export boom of the 1970's, we found that the fastest-growing markets for American agriculture were in two groups of countries. One was the newly industrial nations like Korea. The second group included many Third World countries which were farther behind in developing their economies—and that includes many countries in Latin-America and Africa.

Now, some of those countries are having trouble making their debt payments, and this has affected agricultural credits as well as other loans. We all know, for example, that the Agriculture Department has had to take over some export credit loans that it had guaranteed in past years—and it has had to make plans for the possibility of taking over additional guaranteed loans.

Credit programs are fine. I support them. We have used them effectively in the past to help maintain agricultural exports—and we will use them again in the future, both in commercial credit programs and in the Food-for-Peace Program.

But we have to face the fact that nations which cannot pay existing debts are going to be trying desperately to improve their balance of payments. They are not likely to want to create new debt in order to expand imports beyond levels of absolute necessity—and this could slow down the expansion of American farm exports we are all hoping for. Where credit is used, we could be seeing a greater demand for concessional terms rather than the commercial, free-market trading that is everybody's long-run goal for the bulk of our exports.

Just a few days ago, the Overseas Development Council issued a report noting that recession and debt problems in the Third World have seriously depressed American exports to many countries. The report said the impact has been most serious on our exports of machinery and other manufactured products. But it added that agricultural exports have also been affected.

The Development Council report says economic recovery in the United States would help move toward a broader recovery. But that won't be enough. American recovery by itself won't help Latin America pay its debts—it won't solve the problems of drought in Africa—and it won't deal with the problem of high American interest rates and the high-priced dollar. We're going to need action on a number of fronts, including steps that will bring interest rates down.

So when I read these days about the debt crisis abroad, I think about more than banks. I think about American agriculture.

When I read about the importance of getting interest rates down so foreign borrowers can afford to make payments to our country, I think about more than banks, I think about the American farmer and the way his income is affected by exports.

I suppose the lesson is that in this problem of Third World debt and international interest rate problems, we are all in the boat together. We had better begin working together to bail out the boat. We may need to restructure not only the debt owed by foreign countries or by foreign borrowers of every kind, but also our policies, rules, and regulations dealing with this problem. Such Mr. Speaker, should be done with full knowledge that what we do may well impact in a most negative way upon our country's agriculture economy if not done properly and with concern for the most productive sector of our economy which is agriculture and that vast sector known as agribusiness.

GERALDINE FERRARO—A HISTORICAL PIONEER

(Mr. PANETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure and pride to join my colleagues in welcoming GERALDINE FERRARO back to the House after her historic selection as the Democratic nominee for Vice President.

GERRY's selection as the Vice Presidential nominee is historic for a number of reasons. First, of course, she is the first woman nominated by a major party for this high office. As such, she is a source of pride to the one-half of our Nation's population which has never had entry to our Nation's highest public offices. It is about time that the changes taking place in our society as women move toward real economic and social equality be reflected in our Nation's leadership.

In addition, it gives me a great deal of personal pride that the Democratic Party has selected the first Italian-American nominee for Vice President. Italian-Americans, who have made such a rich contribution to our Nation's cultural and political history, have now taken another step forward in a country which they have embraced with great patriotism and pride.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is also another reason for pride for all of us here in the House. It is unusual for a Member of this body to be selected for the national ticket of either major party. We should all be pleased with the recognition of the skills and experience of Members of this body, which often go unnoticed because of our large numbers.

Again, it is truly a pleasure to congratulate my friend, GERRY FERRARO, on her historical selection as the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee. I feel certain that she will live up to the confidence that has been shown in her and the responsibility which she now carries.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thought this evening I might spend some time reviewing a number of the items that were found in the Democratic platform adopted at the Democratic Convention last week. During that period of time, of course, we received a rather uncritical viewpoint of that particular platform and I think that it would be well to review it, taking into account some of the items that I think are out of sync and out of touch with the wishes of the vast majority of the American people.

There are a lot of items in that platform, it seems to me, which belie the claim of the Democratic Party that they have become the party of family, the party of the working people, the party of interests reflecting the broad view of the public and are a party that is dedicated to traditional values.

As you look through their platform you find many items which simply do not reflect those kinds of attitudes. For example, one of the issues most on the minds of the American people at the present time, most on the minds of the world as they look at the United States, is the question of the budgeting practices of the Federal Government, it is the question of how we are going to operate our fiscal affairs here in the House of Representatives, within the Government, in such a way as to bring down massive deficits.

The Democratic Party spent a lot of time at their enclave talking about deficits, talking about the fact that the deficits are attributable to Ronald Reagan, a contention that I would not agree with given the fact that all spending bills start right here in the House of Representatives. The appropriations policy of the Federal Government begins here. Deficits are not Presidential problems, they are congressional problems.

But regardless of that, we have to acknowledge the fact that the Democrats spent a lot of time at their convention talking about deficits.

It is interesting to note, however, that the one thing that the American people say that they want to have done in order to correct the deficit problem; namely, a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, is specifically rejected by the Democratic Party in their platform. That is something which they say they will not have as a part of the policies that they are willing to implement at the Federal level. I think that speaks plainer than anything else. We all know that all of the promises and all the talk about deficit goes for naught if we do not impose some kind of discipline on this body and on the country as a whole. The discipline needs to be imposed on the Congress, it needs to be imposed on Presidents. That discipline comes in the form of a constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

The Democrats, by saying in their platform that they do not believe that a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is the right course to take, tell us more about the budgeting practices of that party than nearly any other statement they could make.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida who is a member of the Budget Committee.

Mr. MACK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the wording that is in their platform says something like, "a balanced economic policy." It is interesting the choice of the word "balance" in there to try to, I guess, to give people the impression that what they are working toward is a balanced budget.

But in reality and we see it happen I guess every day here on the floor of the House and today probably is a good example as any. There was an opportunity today to reduce spending, not to eliminate programs, but to just say we ought to hold the line on spending in this country and in fact there were two opportunities. One, there was an amendment offered by Mr. DANNEMEYER, I believe, to hold the level of spending at the same level as last year. Someone else suggested that maybe there ought to be a 15-percent increase. Two different votes. Both of those votes lost.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Of course, the wording in the Democrats' platform says that what they are going to do is reduce deficits by—they have a whole list of things that they are going to do—but then they say by "cutting other unnecessary expenditures."

Well, what we know from this body is every expenditure is necessary. They do not bring a bill to the floor that is not of great moment, that is absolutely necessary that we spend the money for. So really that is a statement that says that they are not going to cut anything.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the gentleman makes a very important point because day after day we have sat here on the floor of the House, most often under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, challenging genuinely unnecessary expenditures. And we have found the majority unwilling to shave even a penny off of them.

I am reminded of the attempt of the gentleman to reduce by a small amount the appropriations for the National Science Foundation. The National Science Foundation is a worthwhile organization. I applaud much of its research. But certainly that is an area where we could afford to scale back a little bit, especially in view of some of the more ludicrous research projects that we all know have been funded by the NSF. Yet, we find an absolute unwillingness to cut number one penny even from the budget of the National Science Foundation.

Mr. WALKER. Well, the gentleman will remember that I raised the point that one of the things that we had spent money on in last year's budget was a study of free-ranging coyotes. Now, they may well be an expenditure of some merit, I do not know, but at times of $200 billion deficits it seems to me that there is one place that we might be able to save a little money.

Mr. WEBER. I also recall our colleague from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] offering an amendment which would have simply deleted funding for elevator operators in the House office buildings that run automatic elevators. We thought that we could not cut that because of the Democratic majority.

But if automatic elevators being run by elevator operators are not an unnecessary expenditure, I do now know what is.

The unwillingness of the Democratic majority in the House to even cut that out of the budget pretty much tells me that they are not going to cut the budget.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman will remember the other day when our colleague from California [Mr. LUNGREN] came to the floor and described to us a building that was going to be built in his district, a $20 million Federal building, that he said was unneeded. He told us it was unnecessary, that here is something that we do not need, we do not want. "I am offering an amendment to take it out of the budget even though it is in my district. "Now, that was an unusual event to begin with. We do not have many Members of Congress who do that.

This Congress voted to spend the $20 million, even though the Congressman from the district said they did not want it.

When we start talking about the fact we are going to cut deficits by taking out unnecessary spending, this Congress does not have a very good record.

Mr. MACK. If the gentleman would yield, I would like to go back to the point that my colleague raised about eliminating the operators of the automatic elevators. It may be, and I think this is worth exploring, because one of the things that from time to time people will attempt to say about me and other conservatives, I guess, is that we lack compassion.

The real issue here is you are talking about putting people out of work is the line that is usually brought up.

It was interesting though that in this particular amendment that was brought to the floor, the amendment said that we are really not going to put anybody out of a job, it is just when they should happen to decide to leave that position, or for whatever other reason it might become unoccupied, that we are just not going to hire anybody to fill those positions.

Mr. WALKER. We are going to leave that automatic elevator vacant at that point when that person leaves the job. That is exactly what it said.

Mr. MACK. That is correct.

But there again for some reason those who voted against it could not bring themselves to the idea of even cutting spending to that degree.

I just want to build on one more point raised about the balanced budget amendment and the Democratic platform that basically says a balanced economic policy. There is nothing specific in that platform about how to balance the budget other than to refer to what taxes they would raise. Basically they are talking about the same thing they have talked about for the last 18 months. One is to try to figure out some way to cap the third year of the tax cut. The second way is to see if they cannot push indexing back for several years.

I think that is is about time that the American people really had a direct response in that what we will do is we will ask for a balanced budget amendment. We will ask for a line item veto. That is how you are going to control spending.

Mr. WALKER. Let us understand that they did put some things in their budget about how they are going to reduce spending and how they were going to handle this budget.

Here is what they said. They said they were going to reassess defense spending. Now that is in the portion of the platform where they are talking about the budget.

□ 1830

But when you get down to the defense portion of the budget, we find out that they are not going to lower spending; they are in fact going to continue to raise spending, too, though not maybe quite as fast as what the Reagan administration is. So that was one thing.

I just want to go down through a couple of these things so that we understand. They also said they they are going to create an adequate and fair tax system.

The gentleman from Florida is absolutely right. What does that mean? Well, Walter Mondale told us flatly what is meant: They are going to raise taxes, and one of the ways in which they were going to raise taxes is, they are going to eliminate indexing, which means they are going to raise taxes on the average American working family.

They also said they were going to control heath costs. But when you get down to the health cost portion of their platform, you find out that they are committing themselves to the goal of a comprehensive national health insurance system.

Well, that is the most expensive health care policy ever created in the mind of man. So, you know, what they say later on in the plaform belies that.

And then as I say, they say they are going to cut other unnecessary expenditures, and I guess we have already raised the point: What does that mean, if we cannot even begin through the process of attrition to move operators out of automatic elevators?

I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would like to refer back to the first point the gentleman made, because I think on the question of defense spending there was more confusion coming out of the Democratic Convention than on just about any other issue.

As I talk to my constituents in my district—and I am sure the same is true of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and our colleague from Florida and others—I find my constituents think that the Democrats are going to balance the budget by reducing the defense budget. I talk to them regularly about it, and that is what they think. That is the sort of image that comes through. And yet it is worth nothing, as the gentleman pointed out, the Democratic platform is not committed to a reduction in the defense budget. It is committed to, I believe, a 3 percent increase in the defense budget.

Mr. WALKER. Let me read from the precise quote from the Democratic platform. It says: They are going to "reduce the rate of increase in defense spending." That is no savings; that is just reducing the rate at which defense spending is increasing.

A lot of us might agree with that, that that may be something that needs to be looked at. But the fact is that we are not going to reduce deficits. We have got current service deficits there that are there despite what you do in defense spending. So that reducing the rate of increase does not lower deficits. It simply means that you are not going to have the budget growing quite as fast as it would otherwise grow. So that is pure nonsense to suggest that that is going to somehow get you massive changes in the deficit problem.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Well, maybe it would be helpful if we were to put some numbers with the percentages and some of the things we have been talking about, but the gentleman from Minnesota is absolutely correct, the impression that is given that the way you solve the deficit problem in this country is that you really go after defense. And there was an opportunity, I believe, during the Democratic Convention where they could have gone after the defense. There was a proposal to cut spending by what? Twenty percent?

Mr. WALKER. Jesse Jackson had a proposal on the floor that would have really cut the defense budget.

Mr. MACK. Right.

Mr. WALKER. And they rejected that within the context of the platform debate.

Mr. MACK. By almost a 2-to-1 margin.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRYANT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would just like to ask the gentleman if I hear this correctly. Are you criticizing the Democratic Party because they did not cut defense spending?

Mr. WALKER. No, what I am saying here is that in their budget proposals, where they talk about reducing deficits, one of the things that they say they are going to do is that they are going to reduce deficits by reassessing defense spending. And then when we go down and take a look at the defense portion of their platform, we find out that they are not going to reduce defense spending, they are going to reduce the rate of increase; and so, therefore, what I am saying is that that does not in any way get us down from the current service deficit problem.

Mr. BRYANT. The Democratic platform which I presume you are reading from right there either does or does not call for reduced defense spending. Now, which is it?

Mr. WALKER. It says: "We are going to reduce the rate of increase in defense spending."

Mr. BRYANT. Is that not enough, standing alone?

Mr. WALKER. All I am saying to the gentleman, then, is that they cannot, then, in the budget section of their platform claim that that is the way they are going to fight deficits. You cannot fight deficits by raising spending. You have got to fight the deficits by cutting spending. That is not a cut in spending.

Mr. BRYANT. I think it would be very valuable for the American people to hear exactly what it is that you propose or that the Republican conference or that the President proposes to do to deal with the deficits, when in fact——

Mr. WALKER. If I may reclaim my time, I have been on the floor on a number of occasions proposing across-the-board cuts in appropriations bills.

Mr. BRYANT. If the gentleman will yield, though——

Mr. WALKER. I have specifically, myself, with points of order, knocked out spending that the Democratic controlled committees have brought to the floor that were not properly authorized. We have offered the idea of a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget as a way of ensuring that we impose upon ourselves this discipline. Because every time we offer these cuts, we find that the Democrats almost en masse are voting against those cuts.

Mr. BRYANT. If the gentleman will yield for an intelligent question and give me enough time to frame my question properly, I think what you have to face and what has not been faced by the Republican conference or by the President, either one, is the simple fact that you can either cut defense spending, cut entitlements or raise taxes, or some combination of the three, to deal with the deficits. And all of the time that you all spend after hours on this floor talking about cutting the rest of the budget, waste, fraud and abuse, and so forth, is misleading the American public, in my humble opinion, because of the fact that all the rest of the budget in toto totals only $150 billion. If you eliminated the FBI, if you eliminated the Department of Education, if you eliminated all of those other agencies that you like to talk about the most, you would have cut out only $150 billion from the budget and left still a $50 billion deficit.

Mr. WALKER. But the gentleman misses the point.

Mr. BRYANT. So unless you deal with taxes, unless you deal with defense or unless you deal with entitlements, you are not dealing with the budget, and you do not usually talk about any of the three of them.

Mr. WALKER. Well, if the gentleman will allow me to reclaim my time, the gentleman misses the point of the fact that when we offer to cut even minimal amounts in a lot of those areas——

Mr. BRYANT. Which areas?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman's party votes against it.

Mr. BRYANT. Which areas?

Mr. WALKER. Well, I have offered across-the-board cuts in nearly all the appropriation bills that have come onto the House floor.

Mr. BRYANT. Let us keep the question before the House here. Defense, entitlements, or tax increases, those are the only three areas——

Mr. WALKER. I am simply saying to the gentleman that when we try to have programs—for example, I offered an across-the-board cut on the agricultural appropriation. That was the one that was adopted.

Mr. BRYANT. But let us talk about defense.

Mr. WALKER. That has an entitlement program in it. The gentleman better keep the facts straight here too. It has an entitlement program in it. The food stamp program is an entitlement program. Through that amendment we were able to cut the food stamp program by a marginal amount.

It seems to me that we ought to do that on a lot of other bills, and that is exactly what I have been trying to do on the floor, and I have been getting voted down time after time after time.

Mr. BRYANT. But if the gentleman would yield——

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman's liberal friends are not willing to vote to cut the defense budget and a lot of these other budgets at all. They even say in their own platform that what they want to do is reduce the rate of increase.

Mr. BRYANT. Will the gentleman yield for a followup?

Mr. WALKER. That does not help for the future. It does not help for $200 billion deficits that are here today.

Mr. BRYANT. Would the gentleman yield for a followup?

Mr. WALKER. Sure, I yield.

Mr. BRYANT. Thank you very much.

I simply want to point out that, once again, as you continue your presentation here, you continue to ignore what I said in the beginning, which is irrefutable, and that is the fact that all of those areas of the budget that you complain the most loudly about amount to $150 billion. If you eliminated all of them, you would still have a $50 billion deficit. The only way you can deal——

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is not listening. I just pointed out to him an entitlement program that I came to the floor and helped to cut. Now, the gentleman is not listening. I said to him I am willing to have across-the-board cuts in defense, I am willing to cut out money in entitlement programs, I pointed to him an amendment I had that was successful where we cut out some money in entitlement programs.

Mr. BRYANT. I am listening. As I look around the House I am comforted by the fact that I appear to be the only one who is listening.

Thank you very much.

Mr. WALKER. Well, the gentleman does not seem to understand that I have responded precisely to his question; that we need to cut spending in all categories, including entitlements, including defense, and a lot of other areas.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to compliment him for taking this special order to talk about the platform, because I think it is important for us to discuss this platform, as it will be with the platform after our convention has concluded.

In a speech before the Democratic Convention last week, one of the major Presidential candidates kept on uttering and repeating the phrase "Our time has come." Well, I maintain that if you take a look at this platform you will find that everyone's time has come because there is something in this platform for everyone—everyone, that is, except the taxpayer.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is right. All of the special interests were taken care of in this platform. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. ROTH. I think it is important for us to start thinking about the taxpayer. After all, it is fine to take a look at the people who are getting the dollars, but someone has to pay the dollars, and that someone is the taxpayer.

□ 1840

I think that we have to keep an equilibrium here in this House when we make value judgments. Yes, we are giving something to someone, but we also are taking something away from someone, because we do not create money here on this floor, we have to collect it from someone. I think it is very important for us to remember that simple fact.

If you take a look at this platform, and what was said at the convention, you would think that we are in the greatest depression since the dawn of history, and yet, I think that our people on the other side of the aisle have lost touch with reality, because that is not the facts that we have today; the empirical evidence is different.

In 1980, candidate Ronald Reagan asked the American people: "Are you better off today than you were 4 years ago?" The American people said no. That is why they changed leadership in 1980. Last week the Democratic Party asked the American people the same question. They evidently feel the answer is going to be "no" again. But I think they are mistaken for these reasons: The fact is, the strength of our economy has been very badly underestimated. In January 1983, when the recovery was just beginning, all the major economic forecasters predicted that unemployment in 1984 would be 9.5 percent. Every major economist predicted 9.5 percent. Today, unemployment stands at 7.1 percent. A third of a point less than when the President took office.

I think we have to talk about the facts. It is fine to have all kinds of rhetoric, but let us get down and start talking about the facts. Where is the foundation of all this discussion? It lies in numbers, and the numbers are here on our side. Since the recovery began, more than 6 million jobs have been created.

Mr. WALKER. Would the gentleman repeat that? The Democrats are big on talking about jobs. How many jobs have been created by this administration?

Mr. ROTH. Since the recovery began, more than 6 million jobs have been created.

Mr. WALKER. Is there any Government make-work program that has ever created 6 million jobs, do you suppose?

Mr. ROTH. Well, that is the question to ask. Is there a public works program that ever created 300,000 jobs, let alone 6 million jobs.

Mr. WALKER. There has not been one since we came to this Congress, anyhow.

Mr. ROTH. Well, I have to agree with the gentleman. If you want to create jobs, you have to get the economy moving. Six million jobs. We have more people employed tonight in America than we have ever had employed in previous history.

Take a look at the gross national product, last month, rather last quarter. The increase was 7.5 percent. No economist a year ago predicted anything that was that optimistic. This improvement follows a 10-percent increase in the previous quarter, and, without increasing inflation, which is something that we always must be concerned about. Inflation has been kept to 3.2 percent.

Now, this is a real achievement. This is an economic miracle, and perhaps, most of all, the real disposable income of Americans has risen nearly 8 percent since 1981. I think when we talk to the American people I think we want to talk about the facts, and the facts are these.

In short, the American people today are better off than they were 4 years ago. Yes, clearly, for some the economic recovery is bad news. There are those who continue to preach that it just cannot last, but we have been listening to that every since the recovery began. Can we believe the pontifications of a political party whose last President brought us 21 percent prime interest rates? Thirteen percent inflation? Inflation which was wiping out financially the senior citizens, the people on fixed income, the middle class of this country.

The Democratic platform is long on criticism of the economy. It finds no fewer than seven threats to economic recovery. It promises a better recovery by promising everything to every single group.

Let me just close by saying this: I want to remind my colleagues of something not that Ronald Reagan said, but that Franklin Roosevelt said 47 years ago, when he said that about heedless self-interest. He said that it makes bad economics. Let me say that I think that it is going to make bad politics too.

I complement the gentleman for taking the floor on this very important topic.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin very much. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Just several points; one, to reflect on what was just said, to put in perspective the comment about the number of jobs. If you take 1983 alone, the number of new jobs created in the country was somewhere around 4.8 or 4.9 million, just under 5 million jobs. That is more jobs than were created in the entire economy of Japan during the entire decade, the entire decade of the 1970's, which was Japan's greatest moment as far as economic growth is concerned.

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. Just to build on that, I believe it is also more jobs than were created in the entire Continent of Europe in the previous 10 years, which is basically an experiment in socialism. So the gentleman's point about Japan is well taken. What our economy has done in the last 2 years is nothing short of extraordinary.

Mr. WALKER. It is being recognized worldwide as being nothing short of extraordinary, because in France today, you have the French Government that had been a socialist Government beginning to change its economic policies to a pattern that sounds almost like Reaganomics in order to try to take on some of the character of the U.S. recovery.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I am crowding out our friend from Florida here, so I will not go on for a long time. I just had to comment on that point.

Is it not interesting that the socialist leader of France, Francois Miterrand, after years of failing to get his economy moving is now looking at the American experiment and saying, what we are going to do is reduce taxes to get the economy growing and to create jobs, at precisely the same time as the Democratic candidate for President, Mr. Mondale, is pledging to the world, in accepting his party nomination that, what is he going to do? Raise taxes.

Mr. WALKER. Well, he sounds like Francois Miterrand when Miterrand was running for office in France several years ago and got elected on a pledge to raise taxes and socialize the economy. If you read the Democratic platform, listen to their candidate for President, he is promising the American people Miterrand-kind of solutions to the ills that he perceives, and I would suggest that we will get a Miterrand-type of result as well.

I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. I wish that our colleague from Texas had not left because a couple of us wanted to make some comments to try to bring back the focus of that debate or that discussion as to what, what I think the gentleman was really trying to say to him, besides all of the various amendments that you have offered day-in and day-out to reduce spending. I think the point is this: That we have heard so much emphasis from the Democratic Party as to how they were going to solve the deficit problem, one of which happened to be the point that he was raising about defense spending.

Now, here is the point: If they rejected actual cuts in defense, and accepted a level of 3 percent real growth, then you have to ask, well, what is the Republican position at this point? I think the Senate's defense number is somewhere around 7 percent. So that means there is a difference in the level of spending between the two parties on defense somewhere around 4 percent. The 3 percent that they say, and the 7 percent that the Senate says. Four percent.

A 1-percent cut in the defense budget, let us use the $300 billion budget authority number, a 1-percent cut is $3 billion. So the difference between the two parties is whether we should spend $12 billion more or $12 billion less annually.

Now, the question I would have asked him if he were here is really cutting 12, or reducing the level of increase $12 billion, is that going to solve the $200 billion deficit problem? The answer is clearly "no."

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. That becomes particularly important in view of the fact, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has pointed out, that throughout the Democratic platform, as well as throughout the speeches of their candidate for President, Mr. Mondale are various promises to various interest groups to increase spending on virtually every area of the domestic budget. So we have now the Democratic Party on record for an increase in the defense budget, albeit not as large as the President wants, probably a radical increase in the domestic budget if they make good on their promises. For instance, the health plan that the gentleman referred to could well cost tens of billions of dollars in its first year, and so what are we left with in terms of means to deal with the deficit? If you increase domestic spending dramatically and you increase defense spending somewhat, you are left with only one option in terms of dealing with the deficit, and that is a radical tax increase.

I think the point of this discussion is that if you follow through the logic of the promises in the Democratic platform, that is really where we come. That is what we are left with. A massive tax increase to be imposed on the American people.

Mr. WALKER. Let us understand how much of a massive tax increase that would have to be. If you were to try to solve the deficit by raising the income taxes of the American people, you would have to tax away every dime of income in this country over $25,000.

Mr. WEBER. Over $25,000?

Mr. WALKER. Over $25,000. You would have to take every family that was making more than $25,000 and tax away every penny that they earn over $25,000. Absolutely confiscatory taxation in order to get the deficit down to a balanced budget using taxation alone. Now, that is going to have a major impact on every working family in the country.

That does not mean that you would just begin paying taxes at $25,000; that means that everybody would continue to pay the same taxes that they are now paying, and then anything above $25,000 income we would absolutely confiscate every penny above that, because that is what it takes in order to get a balanced budget using taxation alone.

There is no one who believes that $25,000 families in this country are rich. The Democrats keep talking about the fact that what we are going to do is tax the rich. Well, $25,000 families in this country today are not rich. That is middle-class America.

The very idea that you have a Democratic Presidential candidate who is telling us, "I am going to raise your taxes," and telling us that flatly, when you begin to understand the numbers on all of this it really means that it is going to have a devastating impact on working families across this country.

So when we do understand that they are not going to cut defense spending in real terms, they are not going to cut entitlement programs, they have told us that flatly here on the floor, the gentleman from Texas makes a valid point that there is not much else to cut, and certainly they have not been showing any willingness to cut in the other areas.

So they are going to solve the problem by raising taxes. That means raising taxes massively on American working families, and American working families simply cannot afford tax increases of that magnitude.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, one final point I think needs to be made there and that is that it simply will not work. Even if Walter Mondale were elected with strong Democratic majorities in both Houses of Congress and were to pass through this massive tax increase to balance the budget, it would not work. Why? Because a big tax increase of that kind has a definite effect on the performance of the American economy.

We have seen the deficit reduced from last year's level already from about $195 billion to about $165 billion or $170 billion on an annualized basis. Why? Because of economic growth, because when the economy grows rapidly, more revenues come into the Treasury and we are forced to spend less on programs to help people in need.

So we have seen the budget come down somewhat through economic growth. Now, in calling for a massive tax increase, what the Democrats are really saying is, let us adopt, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has pointed out, the policies that have failed so miserably in Europe over these last several years. In so doing, one of the things they will do is choke off this economic recovery which will, in itself, dry up revenues coming into the Treasury, force us to spend more money on things like unemployment compensation and welfare and food stamps that help people who are in need, so we will not have the effect of eliminating the deficit even if we do have that massive tax increase because we will throw the economy back into a recession.

Mr. WALKER. What the gentleman is saying is that the Democrats will provide themselves with a self-fulfilling prophecy. They all predicted this was a temporary recovery. Put them in power and it will be a temporary recovery because they will adopt policies that will assure it would be temporary because they will adopt policies that will undercut the recovery and, thereby, eliminate it.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield further, the reason they are so sure it will abort the recovery is because they are the exact same policies that they tried under the Carter administration.

Mr. WALKER. That is exactly right. The Carter administration was an economic disaster, and that is precisely the thing that the American people rejected overwhelmingly in 1980, and thereby put into effect a brandnew policy under the Reagan administration.

Let me also point out that the Democrats went beyond talking about budget matters. We have ranged to some other subjects, but one of the things that their platform puts a lot of stress and a lot of emphasis on is the question of jobs. They are sensitive to the fact that unemployment is still too high in the country, even though it is at a level below that which Ronald Reagan inherited from Jimmy Carter.

But the Democrats feel that they, in their platform needed to deal with that jobs issue. It does not acknowledge, really, the fact that job creation is going on as a result of economic recovery but, rather, what it does is propose Government solutions. It proposes that we substitute Government for growth in the production of jobs. So in paragraph after paragraph in the Democratic platform on the issue of jobs there is discussion of what Government can do to create jobs or to create opportunities for jobs, rather than looking at how we produce an economy growing fast enough that creates the jobs for people and absorbs those people into the totality of the economy.

We have talked a little bit about taxes. The Democratic platform also talks about taxes. It talks about how they are going to raise sufficient revenues "without increasing the burden on average taxpayers." Now, that is nice rhetoric and that sounds very good. I think that is put in there for the very obvious purpose of trying to say to the American people, "We are going to raise taxes, but in the election we do not want to tell you that the taxes that are going to be paid are going to be paid by you."

I have just previously given some figures here that indicate that if we are going to raise taxes enough to reduce the deficits down to a balanced budget, we are in fact going to have to raise taxes massively on the American people, and I do not contend that any Congress would ever pass a bill that would substitute confiscatory taxation for the present tax system on everyone over $25,000. I do not think that is going to happen. Obviously, it is not going to happen.

But then, if we are not willing to confiscate all income over $25,000 in order to balance the budget, the question becomes what are we willing to do in the tax system? Then we have got to begin to lower the amounts of income for taxation if we are not going to confiscate all of it above certain levels. What that means is that we begin, then, to get the income level down to about $15,000, where we begin to raise taxes.

Once, again, I would say that I do not find very many of my constituents who believe that someone earning $15,000 is not an average taxpayer, is a rich taxpayer who should be soaked further by Government to make up for its own over-spending practices. Yet, when we look down through the Democratic budget, we find them talking about increased taxes of all varieties, and my contention would be that those increased taxes are going to have a devastating impact on average American working families.

The Democrats in their platform talk extensively about arms control. It is one of the major items that they have in their platform. It is one of the major items that they claim that they are going to be campaigning across the country on. I hope the American people will take a close look at that section of the platform. I hope that they will ask the Democrats what some of that language means, because if we take language like "that they propose an early summit with regular annual summits to follow with the Soviet leaders," that is one of the major proposals, and then a number of others.

In my view, as I read through it, their whole arms control package is based upon one concept, and that is "Trust the Soviets"; that somehow we can build a trustworthy relationship with the Soviet Union that thereby allows us to reduce our own nuclear arms and do a lot of other wonderful things. But the bottom line is that the policy comes down to "Trust the Soviets."

My own view is that the Soviet Union cannot be dealt with as a trustworthy power; that they have violated our trust in all too many instances; that if we are going to arrive at arms control policies, and I think it is valuable for us to move in that direction, we are going to have to do things which do not trust the Soviets but deal with the Soviets. Dealing is different than trusting in that what you do is that you deal from a hard-nosed basis; that you deal with reality; that you deal from strength; that you make absolutely certain that everything that you do is nailed down; that every agreement is spelled out in detail; that there are no loopholes; that there are no chances for violations of these kinds of things.

That is a policy that gets you real arms control that works. Too much of the Democratic platform and the Democratic promises with regard to arms control do not talk about that kind of tough-minded stance but, rather, talk about the kinds of things which I would contend add up to trusting the Soviets.

The Democrats talk about health care, and I have mentioned previously that they make a commitment to "the long-term goal of comprehensive national health insurance." Not only is that expensive, as I have mentioned before, not only does that belie their deficit-reducing package where they said they were going to reduce the deficit by controlling health costs, but it is also the question of whether or not this country wants to move in the direction of socialized medicine.

□ 1900

A comprehensive national health insurance program is nothing short of that which has been tried in a number of European countries. It comes down to being socialized medicine. I would contend that is expensive. I would contend, moreover, it is a policy which reduces substantially the quality of health care and results in a two-tiered health system, one paid for in massive amounts by the taxpayer, another which provides most of the health care and is still paid for privately by individuals, such as what we have found to be the experience in places like Great Britain. That is not movement toward doing something meaningful to change what are the legitimate health care problems in this country, what people are legitimately concerned about when they go to the hospital or go to their doctors. That will not overcome those problems. In fact, in many ways it will aggravate those problems.

Well, there are a number of other items and I intend to review those at some point in the future, Mr. Speaker, but I think at this point I will stop with this particular discourse on the Democratic platform, pick it up at a later day, and yield back the balance of my time.

FEDERAL CHARTER FOR THE POLISH LEGION OF AMERICAN VETERANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on July 23, the President signed into law my legislation granting a Federal charter to the Polish Legion of American Veterans, U.S.A., and I rise to congratulate this outstanding organization on this momentous achievement.

The members of the Polish Legion of American Veterans have been waiting for more than 35 years for this recognition, and I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to the many Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate who supported the Polish Legion of American Veterans in this effort. I would especially like to express my gratitude to Senator FRANK MURKOWSKI, who successfully steered this legislation through the U.S. Senate, and to thank the distinguished chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, the Honorable PETER RODINO, and the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, the Honorable SAM HALL, for their expeditious consideration of this bill during the first session of the 98th Congress.

Most importantly, my bill could not have gone forward without the tireless efforts of Norman A. Lelo, the national commander of the PLAV, and the many officers and members of the Polish Legion of American Veterans, whose hard work made this Federal charter a reality. Last October when the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations of the House Judiciary Committee held hearings on this legislation, Commander Lelo led an outstanding group of witnesses to testify in support of granting a charter and the testimony of these dedicated individuals contributed mightly to obtaining this charter. Wanda Swiecki, the national president of the ladies auxiliary gave a detailed report on the auxiliary's activities, and Ralph Wozniak, the national veterans administration volunteer service director of the PLAV, provided the subcommittee with valuable data on the volunteer services of the organization. From my own State of Illinois, Fred Skowronski, national treasurer, made an invaluable contribution to moving this legislation, not only by testifying at this hearing, but also by first bringing the organization's desire to obtain a Federal charter to my attention. Aloysius Mazewski, the national president of the Polish National Alliance and of the Polish American Congress, also appeared before the subcommittee, and helped mobilize support for this legislation.

Other team players who contributed to the strength of the presentation before the subcommittee included: Gene Hentkowski, national finance director; John Wierzba, national public relations officer, and Frank Tadrzynski, past national commander. Without the actions of all of these individuals, this legislation could not have become public law, and I am proud to have worked with the many members and officers of the Polish Legion of American Veterans, in their efforts to obtain a Federal charter for their fine organization. Polish-American war veterans have had a long history of service to the United States, both in war and in peace, and I know of no group which is more worthy of this recognition.

Organized in 1921 by Polish-American veterans of World War I, the Polish Legion of American Veterans has almost 14,000 members and maintains posts in Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin. These volunteers perform valuable volunteer services in some 45 Veterans' Administration hospitals throughout the United States.

In addition to providing voluntary community and hospital services, the Legion sponsors a yearly national scholarship contest to assist worthy students in obtaining their education, and for the last 25 years has also sponsored a yearly Americanism essay contest to inspire the young people. Members of the Polish Legion of American Veterans conduct an aid to the blind program, provide gifts to men and women in the armed services at Christmastime, and contribute food and medicine relief for the hard-pressed people of Poland.

The granting of a Federal charter finally gives these veterans the recognition they richly deserve, and this chapter will help the Polish Legion of American Veterans expand their volunteer services, which are provided without charge to the American taxpayers. When we encourage organizations like the Polish Legion of American Veterans, we strengthen America's tradition of volunteer action which is vital to the continued well-being of all of our country's citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I again congratulate the Polish Legion of American Veterans on meriting this recognition, and I extend to them my best wishes for continued success in all further charitable and volunteer efforts on behalf of America's veterans and their families.●

FRANCIS HEISLER—A GREAT DEFENDER OF CIVIL LIBERTIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am sad to report to the House on the death of a great citizen of Monterey County, CA, Francis Heisler. Mr. Heisler had a 50-year career as an attorney in which he championed civil liberties and represented the needy. He died of cancer at the age of 88. He was a friend as well as an example to me and many others of what dedication to justice is all about.

Mr. Heisler was born in Hungary in 1895. In 1921, he went to work as a design engineer for German General Electric in Berlin but came to this country in 1924 after a dispute with his employer about his union activities.

Working in Chicago during the 1920's as an engineer for utility companies, at night Mr. Heisler taught history at Chicago City College and studied at John Marshall Law School. In 1930, he was admitted to the Illinois bar.

In Chicago during the Depression, Mr. Heisler defended poor people in disputes with banks, landlords, and utility companies and represented workers in union-related cases. He also became a civil liberties lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union and won a landmark free-speech case before the Supreme Court. He also defended between 1,500 and 2,000 conscientious objectors during World War II.

In 1948, Mr. Heisler opened up law offices in Carmel, CA, although he retained his Chicago practice as well. He won a number of important civil liberties cases in the area.

Mr. Heisler was also committed to helping end the nuclear arms race. In 1958, and again in 1962, he filed suit in both the United States and the Soviet Union seeking a ban on nuclear testing on behalf of international figures such as Linus Pauling, Bertrand Russell, James Baldwin, Joan Baez, and Erich Fromm. Eventually, both nations signed a treaty ending atmospheric nuclear testing.

Mr. Heisler received a number of awards during his long career, including the first Ralph M. Atkinson Award by the Monterey ACLU chapter in 1977 and the Earl Warren Civil Liberties Award from the ACLU Foundation of Northern California in the same year. The Monterey chapter created a similar award in Mr. Heisler's honor this year.

Francis Heisler's career was devoted to the protection and enhancement of individual rights in our country. While the issues may have changed from the 1930's to the present, his commitment never wavered, and his victories and even his defeats in court helped to strengthen our constitutional rights and liberties. For these accomplishments, our Nation and we as individuals owe Mr. Heisler a debt of gratitude. His work will live for many decades to come.

I am proud to say that Francis Heisler was my friend. He inspired others to fight when retreat was easy, to speak out when silence was comfortable, to seek justice when injustice was accepted, to find freedom when bondage was tolerated, and to do all of this regardless of the popularity of each cause. He was the definition of a defender of civil liberties.

I hope my colleagues will join me in expressing sympathy to Mr. Heisler's wife, Dr. Friedy Heisler, and the rest of his family at this very difficult time.●

THE HEALTH EFFECTS OF RADIATION RESEARCH ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of this century, Government has recognized that one of its most important functions is ensuring the safety of our Nation's workers. Substantial progress has been made since the days of Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle" in providing a safer and healthier work environment. No longer are manufacturing plants dens of torture. No longer do we turn our backs on the black lung and brown lung plight facing our miners. Our Nation can be proud of the progress that has been made in providing a healthy working environment, although further efforts are necessary in many industries.

The nuclear industry, however, faces a different situation. There are approximately 80,000 men and women employed in nuclear facilities across the country who are exposed to heavy amounts of radiation every day. Since the early tests of nuclear weapons, there has been disagreement and controversy over the health hazards posed by heavy radiation exposure. Because of this uncertainty, efforts have been made to ensure the safety of workers through regulations and safety precautions. At the same time, research has been encouraged to determine the magnitude of the health hazards facing workers. It is imperative that this research be done in the most objective and unbiased manner possible. Yet, the Federal agency performing the bulk of this research is the same agency which has responsibility for operating and promoting nuclear facilities: the Department of Energy. This is akin to allowing the plant manager in the meatpacking plant in "The Jungle" to determine what is safest for the plant's workers.

The Department of Energy is currently responsible for approximately 60 percent of the Federal research into the health effects of radiation. At the same time, this agency operates and maintains our nuclear production facilities. This conflict of interest casts doubts on the objectivity of their research and on their interest in worker safety and health.

Research into the health effects of radiation must be continued. We must not relent in the search for answers. However, it is critical that this research be conducted objectively, in a manner in which workers and the public can place the highest confidence. The quality of the research conducted by the Department of Energy and the validity of its conclusions is not in question. Instead, the issue is whether the workers and the industry can have confidence in the work. No Federal agency which manages the facilities it studies can meet this concern.

For this reason I am introducing legislation to transfer the authority for these studies from the Department of Energy to the Department of Health and Human Services [HHS]. There are several reasons why HHS makes a better choice. Intuitively, it makes more sense to have health research conducted by an agency responsible for health issues, not one responsible for operating energy and defense programs. Moreover, HHS and several agencies within the Department have studied the health effects of radiation extensively. These include the National Cancer Institute, the Bureau of Radiation Health in the Food and Drug Administration, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences and the Centers for Disease Control. The Secretary of HHS, under this legislation, would consult with the heads of all of these agencies in conducting the research. Finally, an advisory panel would be established to provide advice and assistance in conducting this research.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is long overdue. There have been numerous attempts in recent years to shift research responsibility from DOE to public health agencies, but we always seem to end up where we started, with DOE performing most of the work and public health agencies performing very little. Task forces and advisory panels have been created, but they are short-lived. Congress must enact legislation specifically mandating the transfer of this function. It is my hope that it will not take a disaster like one which occurred at the Sunshine Silvermine disaster before this action is taken. Prior to that tragedy, responsibility for miner's health and safety lay with the Department of the Interior, the same agency interested in promoting coal production. Only after more than 90 people were killed did Congress realize that you can't have both worker safety and production under the same leadership and transferred mine safety and health out of the Department of the Interior. Let us act now before a similar disaster occurs in the nuclear industry.●

THE DEATH OF GEN. "BEBY" TURNAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, on June 30 Mississippi lost one of its finest leaders. Evan Albert "Beby" Turnage died at his home in Monticello, MS, following a lengthy illness. "Beby" Turnage was perhaps best known for his work on behalf of the Mississippi National Guard, in which he served 30 years.

He was adjutant general of the Mississippi National Guard under former Governor William Waller and retired from the Guard in 1980. He attained the rank of major general.

In addition to his outstanding military service to our State and this Nation, he also had a distinguished career as an attorney, chancery judge, and professor at the Mississippi College School of Law. He was dean of the law school from 1980 to 1982.

I am proud to have worked with and served with "Beby" Turnage. He was a great American and we will all miss him.

I want to share this account of his accomplishments which appeared in the Lawrence County, MS, Press on July 5:

[From the Lawrence County Press, July 5, 1984]

GEN. E.A. TURNAGE DIES AT 66

Funeral services were held at Monticello Baptist Church Monday afternoon for Evan Albert "Beby" Turnage, former Monticello mayor and former three-star general and commander of the Mississippi National Guard. Gen. Turnage died last Saturday afternoon at his home in Monticello following a long battle with cancer. He was 66.

Gen. Turnage was well-known throughout Mississippi. He was adjutant general in charge of the Mississippi National Guard under former Gov. William Waller. He later acquired the rank of major general.

Gen Turnage was a graduate of New Hebron High School and Copiah-Lincoln Junior College. He was Co-Lin Alumnus of the Year in 1972. Before entering the U.S. Army to serve in North Africa and Europe during World War II. Turnage worked as county engineer in walthall County. Following WWII, he was awarded the purple heart and was discharged at the rank of captain.

After his stint in the Army, he enrolled at the University of Mississippi and graduated from the Ole Miss Law School in 1948. He was elected County Attorney here his first year out of law school. He was also attorney for the Lawrence County Board of Supervisors.

In 1950, he organized and commanded Company "D" 106 Construction Engineers of the 31st Dixie Division of the Mississippi National Guard headquartered in Monticello.

The local guard unit went into active duty on Jan. 16, 1950, and he served as lieutenant colonel. He was later elected chancery judge of the 13th District Court, a position he held until appointed adjutant general by Gov. Waller.

He retired from the Guard in 1980, and then began serving as professor at the Mississippi College School of Law, where he was instrumental in helping the school obtain accreditation. He served as dean of the law school from 1980 to 1982, when he retired.

After his retirement, Gen. Turnage returned to a limited law practice in Monticello.

Other involvements included four years as mayor of Monticello and a term in the Mississippi House of Representatives. He helped organize South Central Bank, and helped establish Lawrence County Insurance and Realty.

Gen. Turnage was honored by the Lawrence County Chamber of Commerce recently with the annual E.M. Graham Award of Excellence. He received the award at the chamber's annual banquet last April. It was also announced at the banquet that the Chamber is establishing a scholorship at Copiah-Lincoln Junior College for a Lawrence County ROTC student to be awarded each year.

Also at the Chamber Banquet, representatives from the Mississippi National Guard presented Gen. Turnage with the Mississippi Magnolia Cross—the state's highest personal award; the Chief's Eagle Award—the state Guard's highest award; and an award presented by the State Guard Officers Association.

Gen. Turnage was a member of the Monticello Lions Club, the New Hebron Masonic Lodge, a deacon of the Monticello Baptist Church, and a former Sunday School teacher there, a member of the state Oil and Gas Board, director of the Pearl River Basin Development District, director of Southern Pine Election Power Association, and served on the board of directors for First Bank.

He is survived by his wife, Ethyln Dale "Tera" Turnage'; a son, Thomas Albert Turnage of Monticello; a daughter, Lynn Dale Turnage Raynolds of Monticello; a sister, Mrs. O.M. Lela Victoria Anderson of Jackson; and three grandchildren.

Burial was in the New Habron Cemetery, where he was honored with the traditional 21 gun salute by the Mississippi National Guard.

Active pallbearers were; Sonny Turnage, James Jones, Pat Shivers, James Ray Benson, Lloyd Powell, Jack Parkman, Simp Lambert, and Julius Stapleton.

Honorary pallbearers were; Don Druger, Bill McCallus, Gus Wall, Roger Martin, Don Stormo, Dr. J.W. Waller, Dr. B.B. Pace, Glyn Hughes, Billy Harvey, Frank Allen, Jim Miles, Bobby Moore, Jerry McLean, Tommy Jolly, Rep. Wayne Dowdy, former Gov. Willam Waller, former Gov. William Winter, Judge Neville Patterson, and Rep. G.V. Montgomery.●

RECOVERY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, I will continue to speak out on the basic issue that, until resolved, will be the undoing of our prideful American standard of living which has indeed and in fact eroded already.

Now, we hear much talk about economic recovery, but I think that we lose sight of what it is the people talking about economic recovery are talking about and what they really mean. We must remember that we are really in 1984 and the Orwellian use of words is rampant.

The economy has recovered all right to about what it was in 1981, so when these good folks talk about recovery, they are not talking about recovery to some pristine period of time, but to 1981, the year these same folks talk about as a devastating year, as a year that must be turned and changed.

Now, maybe even this return to the 1981 level could continue except for the fact of the constant presence of usurious and extortionate and insidious interest rates that are truly robbing the American people of any kind of economic security. Certainly it has already cheated a generation or so of the dream of such things as homeownership, not with these present usurious, extortionate, wrongful interest rates, because they are slowly but inexorably choking us to death.

With respect to the so-called gross national product improvement of the economy and again which is a hair above what it was in 1981, which is considered by everybody as a terrible year now, not as bad as 1982, not as bad as 1983, but bad enough to have swept Jimmy Carter out of the White House, so we are back to where we started almost 4 years ago. Is that reason for cheer and elation?

The unemployment rate is slightly less than it was in 1981, but there are more people out of work today than there were then. Today there are better than 8 million people officially listed out of work—officially. That does not count from 1 to 2½ million that have simply dropped out of the counting list, but are unemployed.

Well, this is the same as it was in 1981. What is so good about that?

The industrial production index, which is something not mentioned here, is at almost 82 percent. Yes; much better than last year, thank goodness, but not one whit better than it was in 1981.

Housing starts are better off than they were at the beginning of this year than they were in 1981, but they are not a whit better or they were not just a few months ago than they were a year ago, and mortgage rates are again climbing because interest rates are climbing, coming very close to what they were in 1981. Mortgage rates today are 14.6 percent at least and more if you throw in the points and everything in the real world, which in real terms is higher than ever before. Is that progress?

The balance of trade—and at this point I would like to insert into the RECORD an article appearing in today's July 24 Dallas Morning News, entitled "Trade Deficit Could Double, Report Predicts."

[From the Dallas Morning News, July 24, 1984]

TRADE DEFICIT COULD DOUBLE, REPORT PREDICTS

WASHINGTON.—The United States, which posted its worst foreign trade performance in 1983, could nearly double the red ink this year and run abnormally high deficits for the forseeable future, the government predicted Monday.

The Commerce Department, in a bleak assessment of U.S. trading prospects, said the merchandise trade deficit for 1984 could well be in the range of $120 billion to $130 billion.

In 1983, the country, posted a $69.4 billion trade deficit, far surpassing the previous record of $42.7 billion set in 1982.

In a new report, the Commerce Department said the trading gap "should not be expected to narrow quickly."

The huge trade gap has been blamed primarily on two factors. A strong U.S. dollar has made imports relatively cheap and U.S. exports relatively expensive. Also, the U.S. economy recovered from the 1981–82 recession much faster than the rest of the world, spurring strong consumer demand in this country while demand in other countries remained flat.

The dollar is expected to weaken in coming months, and economic growth in foreign nations is expected to pick up steam.

These two factors, while helping alleviate the trade imbalance, will not erase it overnight, the report said.

"A reduction of the U.S. trade deficit to even the $40 billion levels of 1977–82 can only be gradual, even with a favorable movement of the dollar," the report said.

One of the problems, the report said, is growing competition with U.S. exports from newly industrialized countries such as Brazil, Mexico, South Korea and Taiwan, who are beginning to penetrate world markets for heavy industry and high-technology products.

In 1983, the surplus high-technology trade—traditionally a source of U.S. trading strength—declined 23 percent from $22 billion the year before to $17 billion, the report said.

In the largest high-technology category, communication equipment and electronic components, imports of $19.1 billion in 1983 were 70 percent higher than exports of $11.1 billion.

I might mention that the trade deficit of last year exceeded tremendously any trade deficit in the history of our country. These are things that we cannot sneeze off. We must face them.

The continuation of this trade deficit is the biggest single menace confronting our Nation today, confronting the ins, confronting the outs, and all those that really know, the experts who kind of hold their breath hoping that the thing will hold together until November 6, it may not; so the balance of trade today is at a record deficit. That deficit is twice what it was in 1981 and it is getting worse every minute that I am speaking here today.

Now, that may sound dull and dry, as most significant things do, but what that means is that we are losing jobs, exporting jobs. Millions of jobs have disappeared because our industrial goods are no longer competitive with the rest of the world. Why?

Well, interest rates not only kill sales here, but they kill sales abroad. The administration's unwillingness to fight against unfair trade practices contributes to the outflow of jobs and this is a deficit that worsens each day, each hour, draining jobs away with every turn of the tide.

Interest rates are not going down. They are going up, as I have said repeatedly, because the notion is loose in the land, propagated by the very instigators of high interest rates, those that justify high interest rates and try to say that interest rates are like an act of God, nobody can do anything about them, which of course is untrue.

Now, is this progress? Is this recovery?

The prime rate is up to more than 13 percent—the prime rate, which is a 30-percent rise in the past year alone, and rising. Is that progress?

Treasury bill rates are ballooning upward, so much so that the so-called deficit reduction over which the Congress heaved and moaned just a few weeks ago before we quit for the recess; so-called deficit reduction actions have been canceled out just in the intervening weeks because of the increased cost of interest charges for servicing the national debt.

Interest rates again, is that recovery?

Municipal bond rates are up. Mortgage rates are at record heights. That is not recovery. That is a threat of devastation.

□ 1900

Yes; we have a rosy glow, but it is the glow of a fevered economy, a sick economy. It is the same rosy glow that you see that a fevered patient has. It may look good to the inexperienced eye but it is frightening to anyone who knows what is really happening.

And at the bottom of it all is this same question that has plagued mankind since written history of human activity, usurious, extortionate, unjust, unconscionable rates of interest.

I yield back the balance of my time.

GOVERNOR CUOMO'S KEYNOTE ADDRESS TO THE 1984 DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION IN SAN FRANCISCO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, the keynote address of New York Gov. Mario M. Cuomo to the 1984 Democratic National Convention has been hailed by many as one of the most outstanding keynote addresses in history.

As the dean of the New York delegation, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues this keynote address. Therefore, I include here with my remarks the prepared text of the address as printed in the New York Times of July 17, 1984.

The text follows:

TEXT OF KEYNOTE ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR CUOMO TO CONVENTION

On behalf of the Empire State and the family of New York, I thank you for the great privilege of being allowed to address this convention.

Please allow me to skip the stories and the poetry and the temptation to deal in nice but vague rhetoric.

Let me instead use this valuable opportunity to deal with the questions that should determine this election and that are vital to the American people.

Ten days ago, President Reagan admitted that although some people in this country seemed to be doing well nowadays, others were unhappy, and even worried, about themselves, their families and their futures.

The President said he didn't understand that fear. He said, "Why, this country is a shining city on a hill."

The President is right. In many ways we are "a shining city on a hill."

But the hard truth is that not everyone is sharing in this city's splendor and glory.

A shining city is perhaps all the President sees from the portico of the White House and the veranda of his ranch, were everyone seems to be doing well.

But there's another part of the city, the part where some people can't pay their mortgages and most young people can't afford one, where students can't afford the education they need and middle-class parents watch the dreams they hold for their children evaporate.

In this part of the city there are more poor than ever, more families in trouble. More and more people who need help but can't find it.

Even worse: There are elderly people who tremble in the basements of the houses there.

There are people who sleep in the city's streets, in the gutter, where the glitter doesn't show.

THERE IS DESPAIR, MR. PRESIDENT

There are ghettos where thousands of young people, without an education or a job, give their lives away to drug dealers every day.

There is despair, Mr. President, in faces you never see, in the places you never visit in your shining city.

In fact, Mr. President, this nation is more a "Tale of Two Cities" than it is a "Shining City on a Hill."

Maybe if you visited more places, Mr. President, you'd understand.

Maybe if you went to Appalachia where some people still live in sheds and to Lackawanna where thousands of unemployed steel workers wonder why we subsidized foreign steel while we surrender their dignity to unemployment and to welfare checks; maybe if you stepped into a shelter in Chicago and talked with some of the homeless there; maybe, Mr. President, if you asked a woman who'd been denied the help she needs to feed her children because you say we need the money to give a tax break to a millionaire or to build a missile we can't even afford to use—maybe then you'd understand.

Maybe, Mr. President.

But I'm afraid not.

Because, the truth is, this is how we were warned it would be.

President Reagan told us from the beginning that he believed in a kind of social Darwinism. Survival of the fittest. "Government can't do everything," we were told. "So it should settle for taking care of the strong and hope that economic ambition and charity will do the rest. Make the rich richer and what falls from their table will be enough for the middle class and those trying to make it into the middle class."

The Republicans called it trickle-down when Hoover tried it. Now they call it supply side. It is the same shining city for those relative few who are lucky enough to live in its good neighborhoods.

But for the people who are excluded—locked out—all they can do is to stare from a distance at that city's glimmering towers.

It's an old story. As old as our history.

COURAGE AND CONFIDENCE

The difference between Democrats and Republicans has always been measured in courage and confidence. The Republicans believe the wagon train will not make it to the frontier unless some of our old, some of our young and some of our weak are left behind by the side of the trial.

The strong will inherit the land!

We Democrats believe that we can make it all the way with the whole family intact.

We have. More than once.

Ever since Franklin Roosevelt lifted himself from his wheelchair to lift this nation from its knees. Wagon train after wagon train. To new frontier of education, housing, peace. The whole family aboard. Constantly reaching out to extend and enlarge that family. Lifting them up into the wagon on the way. Blacks and Hispanics, people of every ethnic group, and Native Americans—all those struggling to build their families claim some small share of America.

For nearly 50 years we carried them to new levels of comfort, security, dignity, even affluence.

Some of us are in this room today only because this nation had that confidence.

It would be wrong to forget that.

TO SAVE THE NATION

So, we at this convention to remind ourselves where we come from and to claim the future for ourselves and for our children.

Today, our great Democratic Party, which has saved this nation from depression, from fascism, from racism, from corruption, is called upon to do it again—this time to save the nation from confusion and division, from most of all from a fear of a nuclear holocaust.

In order to succeed, we must answer our opponent's polished and appealing rhetoric with a more telling reasonableness and rationality.

We must win this case on the merits.

We must get the American public to look past the glitter, beyond the showmanship—to reality, to the hard substance of things. And we will do that not so much with speeches that sound good as with speeches that are good and sound.

Not so much with speeches that bring people to their feet as with speeches that bring people to their senses.

We must make the American people hear our "tale of two cities."

We must convince them that we don't have to settle for two cities, that we can have one city, indivisible, shining for all its people.

We will have no chance to do that if what comes out of this convention, what is heard throughout the campaign, is a babel of arguing voices.

To succeed we will have to surrender small parts of our individual interests, to build a platform we can all stand on, at once, comfortably, proudly singing out the truth for the nation to hear, in chorus, its logic so clear and commanding that no slick commercial, no amount of geniality, no martial music will be able to muffle it.

THE LUCKY AND THE LEFT OUT

We democrats must unite so that the entire nation can. Surely the Republicans won't bring the convention together. Their policies divide the nation: into the lucky and the left-out, the royalty and the rabble.

The Republicans are willing to treat that division as victory. They would cut this nation in half, into those temporarily better off and those worse off than before, and call it recovery.

We should not be embarrassed or dismayed if the process of unifying is difficult, even at times wrenching.

Unlike any other party, we embrace men and women of every color, every creed, every orientation, every economic class. In our family are gathered everyone from the abject poor of Essex County in New York, to the enlightened affluent of the gold coasts of both ends of our nation. And in between is the heart of our constituency. The middle class, the people not rich enough to be worry-free but not poor enough to be on welfare, those who work for a living because they have to. White collar and blue collar. Young professionals. Men and women in small business desperate for the capital and contracts they need to prove their worth.

We speak for the minorities who have not yet entered the mainstream.

For ethnics who want to add their culture to the mosaic that is America.

For women indignant that we refuse to etch into our governmental commandments the simple rule "thou shalt not sin against equality," a commandment so obvious it can be spelled in three letters: e.r.a.!

For young people demanding an education and a future.

For senior citizens terrorized by the idea that their only security, their Social Security, is being threatened.

For millions of reasoning people fighting to preserve our environment from greed and stupidity. And fighting to preserve our very existence from a macho intransigence that refuses to make intelligent attempts to discuss the possibility of nuclear holocaust with our enemy. Refusing because they believe we can pile missiles so high that they will pierce the clouds and the sight of them will frighten our enemies into submission.

PROUD OF DIVERSITY

We're proud of this diversity. Grateful we don't have to manufacture its appearance the way the Republicans will next month in Dallas, by propping up mannequin delegates on the convention floor.

But we pay a price for it.

The different people we represent have many points of view. Sometimes they compete and then we have debates, even arguments. That's what our primaries were.

But now the primaries are over, and it is time to lock arms and move into this campaign together.

If we need any inspiration to make the effort to put aside our small differences, all we need to do is to reflect on the Republican policy of divide and cajole and how it has injured our land since 1980.

The President has asked us to judge him on whether or not he's fulfilled the promises he made four years ago. I accept that. Just consider what he said and what he's done.

Inflation is down since 1980. But not because of the supply-side miracle promised by the President. Inflation was reduced the old-fashioned way, with a recession, the worst since 1932. More than 55,000 bankruptcies. Two years of massive unemployment. Two-hundred-thousand farmers and ranchers forced off the land. More homeless than at any time since the Great Depression. More hungry, more poor—mostly women—and a nearly $200 billion deficit threatening our future.

The President's deficit is a direct and dramatic repudiation of his promise to balance our budget by 1983.

That deficit is the largest in the history of this universe; more than three times larger than the deficit in President Carter's last year.

It is a deficit that, according to the President's own fiscal advisor, could grow as high as $300 billion a year, stretching "as far as the eye can see."

It is a debt so large that as much as one-half of our revenue from the income tax goes to pay the interest on it each year.

MORTGAGE ON CHILDREN'S FUTURE

It is a mortgage on our children's futures that can only be paid in pain and that could eventually bring this nation to its knees.

Don't take my word for it—I'm a Democrat.

Ask the Republican investment bankers on Wall Street what they think the chances are this recovery will be permanent. If they're not too embarrassed to tell you the truth, they'll say they are appalled and frightened by the President's deficit. Ask them what they think of our economy, now that it has been driven by the distorted value of the dollar back to its colonial condition, exporting agricultural products and importing manufactured ones.

Ask those Republican investment bankers what they expect the interest rate to be a year from now. And ask them what they predict for the inflation rate then.

How important is this question of the deficit?

Think about it: What chance would the Republican candidate have had in 1980 if he had told the American people that he intended to pay for his so-called economic recovery with bankruptcies, unemployment and the largest Government debt known to humankind? Would American voters have signed the loan certificate for him on Election Day? Of course not! It was an election won with smoke and mirrors, with illusions. It is a recovery made of the same stuff.

And what about foreign policy?

They said they would make us and the whole world safer. They say they have.

By creating the largest defense budget in history, one even they now admit is excessive * * * to discuss peace with our enemies. By the loss of 279 young Americans in Lebanon in pursuit of a plan and a policy no one can find or describe.

We give monies to Latin American governments that murder nuns, and then lie about it.

We have been less than zealous in our support of the only real friend we have in the Middle East, the one democracy there, our flesh and blood ally, the state of Israel.

Our policy drifts with no real direction, other than an hysterical commitment to an arms race that leads nowhere, if we're lucky. If we're not—could lead us to bankruptcy or war.

Of course we must have a strong defense!

Of course Democrats believe that there are times when we must stand and fight. And we have. Thousands of us have paid for freedom with our lives. But always, when we've been at our best, our purposes were clear.

OUR ALLIES ARE CONFUSED

Now they're not. Now our allies are as confused as our enemies.

Now we have no real commitment to our friends or our ideals to human rights, to the refusenicks, to Sakharov, to Bishop Tutu and the other struggling for freedom in South Africa.

We have spent more than we can afford. We have pounded our chest and made bold speeches. But we lost 279 young Americans in Lebanon and we are forced to live behind sand bags in Washington.

How can anyone believe that we are stronger, safer or better?

That's the Republican record.

That its disastrous quality is not more fully understood by the American people is attributable, I think, to the President's amiability and the failure by some to separate the salesman from the product.

MAKE THE CASE TO AMERICA

It's now up to us to make the case to America.

And to remind Americans that if they are not happy with all the President has done so far, they should consider how much worse it will be if he is left to his radical proclivities for another four years unrestrained by the need once again to come before the American people.

If July brings back Anne Gorsuch Burford, what can we expect of December?

Where would another four years take us?

How much larger will the deficit be?

How much deeper the cuts in programs for the struggling middle class and the poor to limit that deficit? How high the interest rates? How much more acid rain killing our forests and fouling our lakes?

What kind of Supreme Court? What kind of court and country will be fashioned by the man who believes in having government mandate people's religon and morality?

The man who believes that trees pollute the environment, that the laws against discrimination go too far. The man who threatens Social Security and Medicaid and help for the disabled.

How high will we pile the missiles?

How much deeper will be the gulf between us and our enemies?

Will we make meaner the spirit of our people?

This election will measure the record of the past four years. But more than that, it will answer the question of what kind of people we want to be.

We Democrats still have a dream. We still believe in this nation's future.

A CREDO FOR THE DEMOCRATS

And this is our answer—our credo:

We believe in only the government we need, but we insist on all the government we need.

We believe in a government characterized by fairness and reasonableness, a reasonableness that goes beyond labels, that doesn't distort or promise to do what it knows it can't do.

A government stong enough to use the words "love" and "compassion" and smart enough to convert our noblest aspirations into * * *

We believe in encouraging the talented, but we believe that while survival of the fittest may be a good working description of the process of evolution, a government of humans should elevate itself to a higher order, one which fills the gaps left by chance or a wisdom we don't understand.

We would rather have laws written by the patron of this great city, the man called the "world's most sincere Democrat," St. Francis of Assisi, than laws written by Darwin.

We believe, as Democrats, that a society as blessed as ours, the most affluent democracy in the world's history, that can spend trillions on instruments of destruction, ought to be able to help the middle class in its struggle, ought to be able to find work for all who can do it, room at the table, shelter for the homeless, care for the elderly and infirm, hope for the destitute.

PEACE IS BETTER THAN WAR

We proclaim as loudly as we can the utter insanity of nuclear proliferation and the need for a nuclear freeze, if only to affirm the simple truth that peace is better than war because life is better than death.

We believe in firm but fair law and order, in the union movement, in privacy for people, openness by government, civil rights, and human rights.

We believe in a single fundamental idea that describes better than most texbooks and any speech what a proper government should be. The idea of family. Mutuality. The sharing of benefits and burdens for the good of all. Feeling one another's pain. Sharing one another's blessings. Reasonably, honestly, fairly, without respect to race, or sex, or geography or political affiliation.

We believe we must be the family of America, recognizing that at the heart of the matter we are bound one to another, that the problems of a retired school teacher in Duluth are our problems. That the future of the child in Buffalo is our future. The struggle of a disabled man in Boston to survive, to live decently in our struggle. The hunger of a woman in Little Rock, our hunger. The failure anywhere to provide what reasonably we might, to avoid pain, is our failure.

For 50 years we Democrats created a better future for our childern, using traditional democratic principles as a fixed beacon, giving us direction and purpose, but constantly innovating, adapting to new realities; Roosevelt's alphabet programs; Truman's NATO and the GI Bill of Rights; Kennedy's intelligent tax incentives and the Alliance For Progress; Jonhson's civil rights; Carter's human rights and the nearly miraculous Camp David peace accord.

Democrats did it,—and Democrats can do it again.

We can build a future that deals with our deficit.

Remember, 50 years of progress never cost us what the last four years of stagnation have. We can deal with that deficit intelligently, by shared sacrifice, with all parts of the nation's family contributing, building partnerships with the private sector, providing a sound defense without depriving ourselves of what we need to feed our children and care for our people.

We can have a future that provides for all the young of the present by marrying common sense and compassion.

We know we can, because we did it for nearly 50 years before 1980.

WE CAN DO IT AGAIN

We can do it again. If we do not forget. Forget that this entire nation has profited by these progressive principles. That they helped lift up generations to the middle class and higher: gave us a chance to work, to go to college, to raise a family, to own a house, to be secure in our old age and, before that, to reach heights that our own parents would not have dared dream of.

That struggle to live with dignity is the real story of the shining city. It's a story I didn't read in a book, or learn in a classroom. I saw it, and lived it. Like many of you.

I watched a small man with thick calluses on both hands work 15 and 16 hours a day. I saw him once literally bleed from the bottoms of his feet, a man who came here uneducated, alone, unable to speak the language, who taught me all I needed to know about faith and hard work by the simple eloquence of his example. I learned about our kind of democracy from my father. I learned about our obligation to each other from him and from my mother. They asked only for a chance to work and to make the world better for their children and to be protected in those moments when they would not be able to protect themselves. This nation and its government did that for them.

And that they were able to build a family and live in dignity and see one of their children go from behind their little grocery store on the other side of the tracks in south Jamaica where he was born, to occupy the highest seat in the greatest state of the greatest nation in the only world we know, is an ineffably beautiful tribute to the democratic process.

And on Jan. 20, 1985, it will happen again. Only on a much grander scale. We will have a new President of the United States, a Democrat born not to the blood of kings but to the blood of immigrants and pioneers.

We will have America's first woman Vice President, the child of immigrants, a New Yorker, opening with one magnificent stroke a whole new frontier for the United States.

It will happen, if we make it happen.

I ask you, ladies and gentlemen, brothers and sisters,—for the good of all of us, for the love of this great nation, for the family of America, for the love of God. Please make this nation remember how futures are built.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BRITT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I missed the vote taken on a motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4280, the Retirement Equity Act of 1984, on May 22, 1984. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" as a strong supporter of this much-needed pension reform.●

GOURMET FOODS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, that flamboyant entrepreneur of cuisine, Mrs. Julia Child, once exclaimed "I'm a red meat eater! I feel I need red meat to keep my blood circulating, my color good, and my energy up."

Because red meat is rich in iron and protein, I agree with Mrs. Child and want to bring to the attention of my House colleagues the following article which appeared in the January 1984 edition of Reader's Digest.

The article helps lay to rest the dubious assertion that meat is not really necessary in a good diet—the myth put forward by some folks who prefer bean sprouts to T-bone steaks. Mr. Speaker, people can eat whatever they want and whatever they feel is right for them—but as the article states, Americans are getting a bum steer about beef from a nutritional and health aspect. I, for one, will not give up my mesquite charcoal grilled beef! Following is the complete text of this fine article:

In "A Tramp Abroad" Mark Twain wrote of a homesick American traveler in Europe: "Imagine an angel suddenly swooping down and setting before him a mighty porterhouse steak an inch-and-a-half thick, hot and sputtering from the griddle; dusted with fragrant pepper; enriched with melting bits of butter; the precious juices of the meat trickling out and joining the gravy."

Few of us require such a description to whet our appetites for "the most royal of meats." Beef has long been king on millions of our outdoor grills, its tantalizing sizzle over rosy charcoal sending an unforgettable scent into the summer air. And can anyone come up with a more "noble" sight than a standing rib carved at the table, its pink slices falling succulently upon the platter?

Not surprisingly, Americans consume 77.2 pounds of beef per capita each year—some 18 billion pounds in all.[1] Every day a single famous fast-food chain grills ten million hamburgers, America's favorite sandwich.

Despite this popularity, a number of respected nutritionists have placed beef on their hit list, claiming that Americans consume too much animal fat, which may be a cause of cancer and heart disease. Perhaps the best-known of these critics is Tufts University president Jean Mayer, member of numerous national and world committees on nutrition. He points out that many cuts of beef are high in fat—predominantly saturated fat. Mayer also notes that fat is high in calories and that both saturated fat and dietary cholesterol tend to raise the level of blood cholesterol. A number of prominent scientists agree.

But Rodney L. Preston, a nutrition professor at Texas Tech University, raises an important point. Because a high blood-cholesterol level is a risk factor in the development of coronary vascular disease, he says, some have concluded that foods containing cholesterol should be avoided. This conclusion ignores the fact that the normal human body needs cholesterol—about 1000 milligrams each day—and that the difference between the amount required and the amount consumed will be produced by the body itself. In any event, a three-ounce serving of beef contains just 75 mgs. of cholesterol. In fact, the average daily U.S. diet, including eggs, milk and meat, contains only 300 to 550 mgs. of cholesterol.

George M. Briggs, professor of nutrition at the University of California at Berkeley, former president of the American Institute of Nutrition and a member of the research team that discovered vitamin B-12, points out that three ounces of lean beef have no more cholesterol than three ounces of chicken. In a normal 2400-calorie diet for an adult male, he says, those three ounces of lean beef supply only 8 percent of calorie needs, but 45 percent of the recommended daily allowance of protein, 79 percent of vitamin B-12, 38 percent of zinc, 26 perent of iron, 19 percent of niacin.

What fueled the animal-fat controversy anyway? In 1977, concerned over the high level of heart and other killer diseases, the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs recommended that our daily caloric intake should comprise 12 percent protein, 30 percent fat (it was then about 40 percent) and 58 percent carbohydrates. The committee's report also warned that eating too many fats, especially saturated fats—from meats, egg yolks, butter and lard—could cause cancer, heart disease, high blood pressure and other serious illnesses. A 1980 government publication, in more general terms, encouraged moderate consumption of foods high in fat and cholesterol. In 1982, a 13-member scientific committee, sponsored by the National Academy of Sciences' National Research Council, released its own report, "Diet, Nutrition and Cancer." It suggested that Americans might reduce the risk of breast and colon cancers by lowering their daily intake of fat from 40 to 30 percent of the total calories in the diet.

But another group of scientists, reviewing the 1982 report for the Council for Agricultural Science and Technology, felt that there was not enough evidence to infer that the American diet was unsafe with respect to cancer risks. They noted that "a nutritionally adequate diet must include as much fresh meat relative to other foods as Americans are consuming now."

One of those critical scientists, Dr. Joseph J. Vitale, professor of pathology and director of Nutrition Education Programs at Boston University School of Medicine, stated simply: "There is no evidence to suggest that lowering one's fat intake from 40 to 30 percent of the total calories will have any effect on cancer rates."

As for heart disease, Alfred Harper, former chairman of the National Academy of Sciences' Food and Nutrition Board, writing in the April 1983 issue of the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, maintained that those people who are susceptible to coronary heart disease should be identified for comprehensive treatment instead of changing the diet of the general population. And after questioning more than a million Americans, the American Cancer Society stated, "A preliminary study of dietary factors showed no higher rates of coronary heart disease and stroke in people who ate a high-fat diet than in those who did not."

Actually, only 36 percent of the fat in the U.S. food supply comes from beef, pork, poultry and fish, while 42 percent comes from vegetable sources, such as oils, shortening and margarine. There is reason to believe that by substituting vegetable fats and oils for beef fat in our diets, we could be doing ourselves more harm than good. Recent research on animals suggests that high amounts of polyunsaturates may suppress the body's natural immune responses, possibly increasing the risk of cancer.

Dr. Richard J. Jones, secretary of the American Medical Association's Council on Scientific Affairs, commenting on vegetable oils in our diets, says, "They have been shown in some studies on experimental animals to be more potent promoters of known carcinogens than are animal fats."

Where modern lean beef itself is concerned, these nutritional facts alone should be heeded:

Fact: Beef is highly nutritious and digestible—more so even than vegetables. Beef's healthful ingredients are 96 percent digested, and its many nutrients almost completely used by the body.

Fact: Three ounces of lean beef contain less fat than is assumed—about nine grams. And only about 48 percent of the fat is saturated.

Fact: Red meat is a leading source of iron; one three-ounce serving of beef supplies 26 percent of the recommended daily allowance for an adult male. And this is "heme iron," a type that is three to five times more easily absorbed by the body. Heme iron also has a booster effect on iron in other foods eaten with the meat. (Much of the iron in spinach, for instance, is not available unless eaten in combination with another food.)

Fact: Three ounces of lean roast beef contain 169 calories; the same amount of lean chicken without skin has 174 (dark) and 147 (light); broiled salmon steak has 167.

How much beef should we eat? Nutritionists generally advise that a daily diet should include two three-ounce servings from the meat-poultry-fish-beans group, which includes beef, veal, lamb, pork, poultry, fish, shellfish, dry beans, eggs, seeds, nuts and peanut butter. Although you don't need to eat beef to get a full complement of protein, vitamins and minerals, red meat unquestionably offers important, high-quality nutrients in a relatively low-calorie package that is tasty and satisfying. Variety, of course, is also important in diet, since each food in the four food groups—including also the fruit-vegetable, bread-cereal and milk-cheese groups—offers its own unique pattern of essential nutrients.

By showing us how to use this variety in a common-sense manner, Julia Child has become America's leading lady of food. Between takes of her new TV show "Dinner at Julia's" the star was asked what her favorite entrée was. "Beef!" she exclaimed. "I'm a red-meat eater. I feel I need red meat to keep my blood circulating, my color good and my energy up."

Most Americans would agree.●

THE MEGACORPORATE WORLD OF RONALD REAGAN

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, following are the remarks of Ralph Nader at the National Press Club, Washington, DC, on June 6, 1984:

THE MEGACORPORATE WORLD OF RONALD REAGAN

Many years ago when some of our Nation's political leaders were wise, Thomas Jefferson said that the purpose of representative government was to curb "the excesses of the monied interests." Many decades later, in 1936, Franklin D. Roosevelt, one of the last Presidents to hold corporations accountable for the state of the economy, promised that while "the malefactors of great wealth" had met their match in the previous four years, they would meet their master in the following four years.

Ronald Reagan thinks and acts to the contrary. During Mr. Reagan's first term, the malefactors of great wealth, now described as big business or multinational corporations, have regularly met their obedient servant in the White House. And the power of "the monied interests" has become ever more focused on turning representative government into a versatile accounts receivable for too many mismanaged, speculating, negligent, avaricious, unsafe or downright criminal companies. This Reagan-corporatist revolution, whereby business regulates government in pursuit of private profit at the expense of the legitimate interests of Americans as taxpayers, consumers and citizens, has little to do with being conservative. It has everything to do with building a government of the Exxons, by the General Motors and for the DuPonts.

So systematic, recurrent and widespread are these retrograde policies against basic, Historic American values, as shall be noted shortly, that political commentators have wondered aloud how Mr. Reagan can still be so much in the running for re-election. The implication in their observations is proper: Presidents should be judged for what they do, not for what they say, or what they say they do. These commentators still expect a framework of accountability around the White House that includes the departments and agencies of the executive branch directed largely by Presidential appointees or schedule C personnel.

"The teflon President,"—one of those very apt descriptions by Democrats that ironically serves mainly to encourage their discouragement about November—has a strategy for irresponsible power that invites closer scrutiny.

Rule one is never get openly involved in the details. He who rises by details falls by details could be his motto. Stay abstract, preferably using heroic phrases of reassurance and national pride.

Rule two is amiability—especially in "aw shucks" demeanor with lots of even-toned voice, pendant smiles and head shrugs. Remember Reagan in China. When asked by American reporters what he thought of Peking censoring his remarks on Chinese television, he replied with a slight smile: "You fellows do it all the time." Imagine how Nixon would have been treated had he tried that one.

Rule three is to insulate the President from impromptu media exposure. Have your aides even joke about it, as Lyn Nofziger did on the campaign trail in 1980 when he told reporters "I've got Ronnie under house arrest from you guys."

Rule four is to induce condescension. If people think they are so much smarter than you, then they don't expect much and they forgive more.

Rule five is to create a banality of wrongdoing, of cruelty, of hypocrisy, of selling the country short. Banality avoids the constant search for novelty by media and helps opposing politicans throw up their hands in despair. Any president whose administration can incite the response of the jaded—"so what else is new"—is already almost out of the woods. Banality is nourished by frequency, a numbing frequency of abuses whose very quantity depreciate their provocative impact.

Rule six is to seize the semantics and make the symbols into one's own political ideology.

Rule seven is to be blessed by an opposition party that has largely surrendered the basic contention of politics—namely that of challenging the mal-distribution of power between the haves and have nots. The formula which used to win again and again for the Democrats—that they were the party of the people and the Republicans were the party of the rich—is no longer used in these times of massive campaign finance beggary and the giant corporate lock on an economy increasingly within their prerogative to transfer operations overseas or close down plant by plant. People see this overlap by the two parties in currying the favor of business interests. Deprived of distinct political choice, citizens begin to doubt the credibility of the out of office party when it claims it will be different. The candidates, who can convince that there will be a difference on concrete policy after concrete policy, will move people's minds.

The radical regime of Ronald Reagan does provide a background against which there indeed can be significant choices affecting the perceived needs and rights of citizens. Here are some of the directions pursued by the Reagan-big business axis:

1. The concentration of power within government and business has increased in both political and economic manifestations. The corporate merger movement, given the green light by Reagan, is moving from rabid to frenzied. Nine of the ten largest mergers in U.S. history have occurred under the permissive reign of Reagan. It is difficult to know what limits Reagan would put on mergers, most of which promise no greater efficiencies, no economies of scale, no market discipline of bad management (sans golden parachutes) and no new jobs. His former Justice Department antitrust chief, William Baxter said: "there is nothing written in the sky that says the world would not be a perfectly satisfactory place if there were only 100 companies, provided each had one percent of every product and service market." Nothing written in the sky, but there is much written in the anti-monopoly laws, their legislative history and judicial decisions that would give pause to such a concentrated political economy. Corporate bigness makes its demands on small business and the consumer in prices, in political manipulation and in being too big to fail without a bailout. And the loss of the family farm in the tens of thousands each year to agribusiness and banks receives no attention from this former rural Illinois native who extolls this way of life when he wants votes and then forgets after the election.

Over at the Federal Communications Commission, with Mr. Reagan's full support, his appointees want to eliminate the few viewer's rights under the fairness and equal time doctrines. They want to repeal 7-7-7 limitation (7 AM, 7 FM and 7 TV) stations which can be under a single owner and allow a vastly greater concentration of electronic media ownership.

There is greater concentration of power from many agencies to one—the office of management and budget—within the federal government. OMB makes political judgments, invites back door ex parte meetings with business lobbyists, excludes the public from its right to know and respond under the administrative procedures act, and generally translates unilateral White House dictates in violation of fair play, and by some expert opinion, in violation of administrative laws as well. The Reagan government also keeps Americans out of its decision-making processes by ending legal aid for poorer petitioners before regulatory agencies such as the Federal Trade Commission, by using every technical objection to deny citizens legal standing to challenge their government and by giving early preferential notice of proposals to their industrial and commercial friends. If there is any company on the fortune 100 list that objects to these anti-democratic powerplays, it has kept a very low visibility.

2. There is a wholesale repudiation of the historic role of American governments to protect or expand the public's health and safety. Health and safety laws go unenforced or underenforced below even laggard levels of the past. The food and drug administration's enforcement level is down, so are the enforcement actions against dirty meat and poultry plants and violators of motor vehicle regulations. The enforcement record at OSHA—the job safety agency—is a disgrace made worse by Reaganite reductions in real inspections and redrawing of what constitutes sanctionable violations. Since taking office, Reagan has not issued a single new worker health standard to limit any chemical or gas, though dozens in January 1981 were nearly ready to be issued to reduce cancer, emphysema, and other diseases in the workplace that claim about 100,000 American lives a year. Only one motor vehicle standard has emerged—that dealing with rear mounted lights on automobiles, while several critical lifesavers were revoked or shunted aside. The list can go on and on to demonstrate that Mr. Reagan has very little interest in saving American lives when that objective inconveniences the wishes of his corporate masters.

With the stroke of Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis' pen, a lifesaving, crash protection standard was illegally repealed (according to a 9-0 decision by the U.S. Supreme Court) and thousands of Americans are now dying or being seriously injured every year in frontal collisions by their non-crashworthy cars. Mr. Reagan campaigned against this humane and economical engineering system right along with General Motors which pressed upon him this Macabre position. The same pattern recurs in one industry after another. What do the pesticide companies want? Just follow the Reagan trail of waivers and exceptions for dangerous pesticides, the absence of regulatory action against suspected farm chemicals, the virtual cessation of testing foods for pesticide residues and the reduction of research for non-toxic ways of controlling pests.

The sordid behavior of Reagan's environmental protection agency in bowing to corporate polluters on demand has been reported many times. But Mr. Reagan's responsibility needs to be made clearer. EPA chief, Ann Gorsuch, did the President's bidding. It was the Reagan White House that stopped the new EPA Chief, William Ruckelshaus, from doing anything to reduce the sources of acid rain. It is Mr. Reagan and the corporate polluters who oppose overdue implementation of stricter safety standards for America's drinking water—now so contaminated with heavy metals and cancer-causing chemicals. The corporate polluters want the air and water pollution laws severely weakened. Many polls conclude that the overwhelming majority of people want them strengthened. Ronald Reagan joins with his corporate patrons on these issues as well. Even in the field of toxic waste dumps, scarring and poisoning the America that he professes to revere, Mr. Reagan exerts no leadership. For the great communicator, there is no time for compassionate recognition of victims of corporate abuses, corporate cancer and other forms of industrial violence. It is as if there needed to be proof that the contamination of America's air and water were the products of an international Communist conspiracy before Mr. Reagan would leap into action. Alas, for those sick or dying under Reagan—the real king of the special interests, as a Washington Post headline put it—there is no such relief ahead.

But Mr. Reagan's insensitivity seems at times to go beyond taking orders from business. It reaches to unchartable realms of indifference and irresponsibility that congeal to form a type of intellectual incontinence. Some may call his hard line determination against law and order for corporations and his softness on corporate crime to be totally the result of an ideologically indentured mind perfectly attuned to his political creators—the multimillionaires of the southern California kitchen cabinet who, like a sure winner horse, selected, groomed, trained and financed him for Sacramento and finally for Washington. It is all that but more.

How else can anyone explain why Mr. Reagan would so mistreat the most vulnerable in our society when he could so easily defend their right to live in health, safety, and dignity? Infants and children surely cannot be expected "to vote with their feet," Mr. Reagan. Yet, in 1981, he pushed to drop requirements that gasoline refiners reduce the amount of lead in gasoline. Too many little children in this country already have the devastating symptoms of lead poisoning for more lead violence to be allowed in their bodies. What of asbestos in thousands of school buildings? Despite visible protests from concerned parents, Mr. Reagan and Mr. Stockman refused to ask Congress to appropriate any money to help seal or remove exposed asbestos surfaces spinning off deadly microscopic particles into those young lungs. This commander in chief, who has never met a weapons system he didn't like, wanted to abolish the Consumer Product Safety Commission—a tiny agency with a major mission of protecting children from household and other product hazards. With an annual budget less than two hours of Pentagon expenditures the CPSC did not fit within Mr. Reagan's definition of defense in depth. Fortunately Congress disagreed so just the budget was cut. There is more. After mothers of brain damaged infants lobbied through Congress a bill to have the food and drug administration establish quality control standards for commercial infant formula, Mr. Reagan's White House delayed the issuance of these regulations for eighteen months. Without press exposure, the delay may have been longer. Because of the lack of care and compassion so characteristic of this administration three million additional cans of deficient formula were sold to unsuspecting parents.

Two years ago, health officials at the Food and Drug Administration wanted to require aspirin makers to place a label on their product warning about Reye's Syndrome, a disease causing convulsions and sometimes death in some children who take aspirin when they have chicken pox or the flu. The White House's OMB intervened on behalf of aspirin manufacturers and blocked both the move and a half million copies of pamphlets cautioning parents which were to be distributed through supermarkets. Again there was wide publicity of this intra-government struggle but Mr. Reagan let the aspirin industry prevail.

It was said about Woodrow Wilson that he disliked individuals but loved humanity. The reverse seems to apply to Mr. Reagan with the qualification that individuals are those who are his friends or politically useful symbols during photo opportunities. He brought back, with calculated media exposure, two Korean children who needed operations. Would that he wield his great powers as President on behalf of America's infants and children instead of reducing special nutrition programs for pregnant women who are poor and their newly born.

He must know by now that consistently polls are showing sizable majorities of people dislike his policies though they think he is a nice fellow. As long as that anomaly continues, he has little incentive to sensitize himself by meeting with active victim groups such as the disabled, whom he could help. He has little incentive to ask his speech writers for genuine declarations of his compassionate recognition of their plight and determination to alleviate pain and prevent further trauma and disease.

Recently a young pediatrician took a long unpaid leave of absence from his California practice to crusade for a reinstatement of the crash protection standard (commonly called the airbag rule). He has received some mass media coverage of his efforts. He held a well prepared vigil of physicians at Lafayette Park one Saturday afternoon and delivered a "visual letter" on video tape to the President. The White House, I subsequently learned, did not even bother to do the routine thing and forward it to the Secretary of Transportation. The doctor wondered why he and his fellow physicians could not see the President on a matter that public health specialists have called the single most effective domestic life saving decision that the Administration is in a position to make this year and perhaps for many years. I could have told the physician, recalling the list of past visitors to the President, that he did not qualify for a meeting since he had not won a boxing championship, performed a decisive slam-dunk or won an Emmy.

Mr. Reagan is consistent with his pitiless deregulatory generalities. Had Congress not stopped him, he would have abolished many crucial health and safety requirements imposed on the heavily tax-supported nursing home industry. Instead of firmer enforcement efforts and more adequate standards, he was content to leave defenseless the more than one million elderly in nursing homes.

3. So extreme is the President's corporatism that he is finding more genuine conservative groups taking sharp issue with his policies. In a little reported evolution that may change the future complexion of American politics, organizations who call themselves conservative populists are teaming up with their progressive counterparts to oppose corporate bailouts. Last year this coalition defeated the breeder reactor boondoggle—a high Reagan priority. In 1981 it nearly defeated the legislation regarding the Alaska gas pipeline that would coerce consumers into paying for the pipeline even if they did not receive any natural gas because the project was not completed. The synfuel industry's welfare project is under similar pressure, though its predicted mismanagement and awful economics appear to be self-dismantling. This new coalition put up a strong fight against the Reaganite bailout of the big U.S. banks that made such imprudent loans at skyhigh interest rates to foreign countries. Reagan, who spent years lecturing around the country for General Electric on the virtues of sink or swim free enterprise, has become the most prominent advocate of big business bailouts in American history. If this all goes against his philosophic grain, it demonstrates the contrary power of giant business over his government. His formerly strong belief in states rights is surrendered when companies want his backing for a weaker federal law replacing the adaptable common law in the fifty states that gives people injured by dangerous products rights to sue and recover compenstion from manufacturers. It is surrendered when the banks demand that his agencies preempt stronger state regulations designed to protect depositors and borrowers. It is surrendered again when the nuclear industry wants him to strip state and local governments of their police power over the transportation of radioactive materials throughout their communities. Corporatizing the ex-conservative Ronald Reagan is a routine matter these days, even when Wall Street's economic and tax policy demands result in placing main street, with its small businesses, at a comparative disadvantage.

The simplest of international decencies are rejected by the Reagan administration in obeisance to the multinationals. Mr. Carter's executive order, issued to restrain the export from this country of hazardous products illegal for domestic sale but not for export (e.g. certain drugs, pesticides) or to stop outright illegal exports, was revoked early in this Republican administration. And now with Mr. Reagan's knowledge and support, a clutch of global corporations, state and commerce department officials and this government's UN mission is working to stop the United Nation's draft guidelines on consumer protection. These principles of consumer safety and economic rights, the freedom to form consumer associations and the like are drawn heavily from U.S. law and practice. They are just principles, having no force of authority but meant to have a moral impact on many countries and companies. Suggesting that the world has something to learn from U.S. consumer protection achievements over the past century is apparently too provocative for the corporate statists in the Reagan camp. They seem unmindful of the disasters that have occurred in Third World countries, not a few generated by western corporations taking advantage of the absence of indigenous consumer safeguards.

Such unmindfulness has become a habit. The Reagan government is the only member of the United Nations to vote against a UN resolution seeking to deter the kind of dumping of hazardous materials as occurred with the export of tris-treated (a carcinogen) children's pajamas from the U.S. All our allies voted the other way. The World Health Organization, with just one dissent, that of Ronald Reagan, approved a code for better marketing practices for infant formula promotion. This code was stimulated by the death of millions of Third World babies during the seventies linked to over-promotion of infant formula through scare techniques and other deceptions in conjunction with unsanitary village water sources. This tragedy has been reported in the context of the Nestle boycott that was recently settled with international children's defense groups.

5. Every President has a unique mission of trust imposed upon him by certain conservation laws, some of them enacted by Republican-dominated Congresses and Presidents early in this century. I refer to the Federal lands onshore and offshore with those glorious wildernesses and natural resources for present and future generations of Americans to enjoy and preserve. These lands comprise one-third of our Nation from the pristine wilds of Alaska to the Barren deserts of Arizona (a prime solar energy region someday). Does Mr. Reagan use his communications skills to graphically etch in the minds of more Americans the grandeur and permanence of his public trust? No, although he no longer talks about his support of the sagebrushers who want the States to have these lands on their way to private ownership and exploitation. Instead, he launched, through his agent James Watt, the biggest giveaway program to corporations in modern American history. The Reagan-Watt team wanted to lease billions of acres of offshore lands so fast that the oil company beneficiaries-to-be has to say "Whoa, we can't absorb that rapid a transfer." So they settled for merely massive leaseholds on public lands whose oil and gas potential the Government could not independently verify. In a glutted market of declining prices, Reagan-Watt proposed to lease as much coal in fifteen months as eleven administrations have done in the 63 years since the Government began to lease its coal-bearing lands. These men knew that the coal and oil companies were sitting on existing Federal coal leases without producing any coal. What these companies want is not to produce but to control huge reserves of the people's resources at giveaway prices obtained in a depressed market. Reagan was all too eager to deliver, until organized civic oppositon retired Watt and cooled off an election-sensitive President.

One would at the very least expect Mr. Reagan to want to give taxpayers (that majority of the taxpayers who will pay more in total taxes in 1984 than in 1980) value for what they paid Government contractors to develop. Not at all. By presidential directive, agencies are urged to turn over to companies exclusive patent rights to Government-financed discoveries to the fullest extent permissible. This is one of many areas of corporate privilege to which the Reaganites neglect to apply their cost-benefit formula. But then how can a formula so often rigged to cater to corporations be applied against them?

6. The curtain around Reagan's corporate state is one of intense secrecy whose function of excluding the public's participation and monitoring is nourished by a rising base of zero data. This is an administration that does not want to know what corporations do; it has stopped collecting much data about the large oil companies. It has stopped collecting data about line of business reporting by conglomerates. Referring to across-the-board cuts in Federal statistical gathering services, university of Chicago Dean William Kruskal wrote: "When a vessel is in stormy seas, it is foolhardy to cut corners on radar, navigational equipment, good maps, and ample, well-trained crews." Coupled with not wanting to know, the Government has defined as trade secrets whatever information supplied the Government that companies want withheld from the public. The price of Government reports and pamphlets has skyrocketed to levels reachable only by the affluent or desperate. Look at the Government Printing Office's price list and you will see pamphlets of only a few pages selling for over $2 each. Price hikes have driven the number of publications requested from the Government's consumer information center in fiscal 1984 to half of what they were in fiscal 1982. Many publications, such as the popular car book have been discontinued. Citizens wanting to be placed on mailing lists of the FCC or the ICC for agency press releases are referred to private contractors who will sell you this service. The principle of the broadest possible distribution of information about what the Government is doing and deciding has been destroyed. The pretext is that the user should pay and as printing volume declines the prices go up in a vicious circle of exclusion. The Government pays almost $100 million a year for marching bands. (twice as much as the cost of administering the Freedom of Information Act) and there are no viewer fees charged there.

To top off Reagan's darkness at noon, the basic research and development which elevates awareness of hazards to be averted and opportunities to be developed have been severely weakened due to industry demands. Thus, the experimental safety vehicle program and the fuel economy research program have been closed down. Sharply reduced are research undertakings in energy conservation, cancer prevention, drug safety, toxic chemicals and consumer product safety. Such inquiries could lead to stronger future safety standards—a prospect companies usually like to cut off at the pass. What is so deplorable about Mr. Reagan is that his supine relations with business brings out the worst in corporate behavior. Executives see that they do not have to do safety research or be concerned about compliance with laws that are not about to be enforced. General Motors' chairman, Roger Smith, disbanded the company's crack air bag technology development section unit in April 1981 after learning that Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis was going to scrap the automatic crash protection regulation. Companies that stretch to advance the cause of safety, as have State Farm and Allstate, receive no plaudits, no medals, no encouragement from the man in the White House. If anything, these firms think they may be inviting resentment for their efforts.

All in all, the Reagan Government is the consummate promoter of the rich and powerful when the latter are arrayed against the interests of the rest of America. We must not forget that it is not just Reagan who occupies that eminent political office. It is the network of collegial business interests who have learned so well that the essence of privilege in America's marketplace today requires control over the Government's powers and its public wealth. Subsidies, monopolistic licenses, protectionism, selective enforcement, lucrative contracts, loan guarantees, bailouts, and the free results of expensive research and development are among the dispensations of modern uncle sugar in Washington, D.C. Together these goodies make a bustling bazaar of corporate welfare and largess that requires nurturing and enlargement. Toward this objective it helps to have your own business agent in the White House. It helps to have someone who does not raise the expectation levels among Americans.

Americans have every right to expect some solutions to their everyday afflictions, some value for their everyday tax dollars and some voice for their everyday concerns, Some remedies for their everyday injustices, and some civic mechanism for building their futures.

Citizenship—its empowerment and widespread excercise is a prerequisite for a sound, democratic society. Leadership that empowers more people, that reduces the severe concentration of power and information, and that lifts a nation into missions of accomplishment which will increase justice, happiness and opportunity—that is the leadership for citizens, involving themselves in a national political campaign, to demand. And so too should the media rise to its higher responsibilities in reporting the White House and not mimeographing its rhetoric.

Our history has demonstrated that the well-being of society springs from the growth of daily, active citizenship that provides an enabling environment for good leaders to come forth. Put in today's terms, citizens in our country need to spend more time being citizens. That is the real bottom line.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

AN AMENDMENT TO H.R. 3678 TO AUTHORIZE CORPS OF ENGINEERS DISPOSAL OF HOPPER DREDGING EQUIPMENT

HON. JOHN B. BREAUX

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, Congress in 1978 enacted Public Law 95-269. One of the primary purposes of this legislation was to induce the private dredging industry to build modern, technologically advanced equipment instead of having the Government expend large sums of public funds to build new Government-owned dredges.

The private dredging industry has responded by investing hundreds of millions of dollars in new hopper dredges and other new dredging equipment. Not only has private industry provided the funds for construction of a new dredging fleet but it has also established in the marketplace that it can do the work at a substantially lower cost than was previously done by corps-owned equipment.

Industry's response to Public Law 95-269 and its performance in carrying out the national dredging requirements for the Corps of Engineers, is a classic case of the great virtues of our free enterprise system.

The amendment which I have offered will promote and protect the investment by private industry in its new dredging fleet and equipment. If the corps' retired dredges were offered for sale for use in the United States at a fraction of the cost of construction of new modern equipment, it would discourage contractors from building new dredges and defeat the purpose of Public Law 95-269.

The Corps of Engineers needs this authorizing language in order to proceed with their plans to dispose of their old dredges at the earliest possible time. The cost to the corps to retain these retired dredges has grown significantly. It has cost the corps over $3 million during the last few years to retain these old dredges.

The corps is anxious to dispose of its retired or excess dredges with the exception of the hopper dredges Hains and the Markham which will be retained in a standby readiness status at its facilities in Cleveland, OH, until the Chief of Engineers determines there is no longer any need to retain these dredges on the Great Lakes and notifies Congress accordingly.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the administration both strongly support this amendment which would authorize the Corps of Engineers to dispose of inactive, retired, or excess dredges which are under its control.

Such disposal shall be through sale or lease to governments under the Corps of Engineers foreign technical assistance program, to Federal or State maritime academies for training purposes, or through sale of such vessels or equipment solely for scrap to foreign or domestic interests. The corps' contracts for sale or lease of its retired dredges shall also contain a condition that such dredges shall not be resold for use within the United States for the purpose of dredging.●

THE SPECIAL INTEREST TAX ACT OF 1984

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention an article "Tax Dodgers Finding Shelter on Capitol Hill" from the July 2 Washington Post which roots out only one of the dozens of special interest tax breaks included in the final version of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. This bill, designed to reduce the $200 billion deficits by raising $50 billion over the next 3 years, is riddled with designer tax exemptions specifically tailored for some of the wealthiest corporations and individuals in the Nation. At a time when the deficits are threatening the financial stability of our Nation, it is unconscionable that Congress' tax writing committees can justify including such goodies which will cost the Federal Treasury billions of dollars.

The article's author, Mr. Jerry Knight, focused on a tax dodge for the constituents of members of the House Ways and Means Committee. This tax break has been afforded to 200 or so commodity traders in Chicago at a cost of $300 million to the Government. While this may seem like peanuts relative to the size of the Federal deficit, it translates into million dollar breaks for these individuals.

Yet while the wealthy Americans with friends on the tax writing committees are able to dodge taxes, most Americans will find themselves saddled with greater IRS bills. For instance, the extension of vital programs which promoted energy independence the solar and conservation tax credits were denied. Medicaid benefits, which provides health care for many of the Nation's needy, were tightened.

I urge my colleagues to read this article. Congress will no doubt have to draft another law in the 99th Congress to reduce the deficit by a greater amount. Will this mean yet another box of goodies for the privileged of this Nation?

The article follows:

TAX DODGERS FINDING SHELTER ON CAPITOL HILL

(By Jerry Knight)

In the wee hours one morning a few days ago, when Congress was struggling to reduce the federal deficit, a bunch of millionaire tax dodgers proved that taxes are not as inevitable as death.

Not if you have friends who are writing the tax law.

With most of Congress and the media asleep, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski slipped into the tax bill a provision that gives a small group of accused tax cheaters—most from Rostenkowski's home state—privileges enjoyed by no other taxpayers.

The law of this land is that every taxpayer must bear the responsibility of proving the deductions claimed on the annual Form 1040 are legitimate. If the Internal Revenue Service questions the deduction you took for medical expenses, you have to prove you were sick.

But that rule of law will not apply to some 200 wealthy commodity traders who have been accused by the Internal Revenue Service of perpetrating one of the most costly tax dodges ever discovered.

For these privileged individuals, there will be a presumption that certain deductions they have claimed are legitimate. Only if the IRS can prove otherwise will the deductions be denied.

Outraged IRS and Treasury Department officials say that never before has Congress turned the tax law upside down for the benefit of a special-interest group.

Rostenkowski's midnight amendment could force the government to throw out court cases that took five years to prepare and that the IRS was all but certain to win. These are not small potatoes cases. The IRS says one Chicago commodity broker owes about $8 million and many of the 200 owe more than $1 million apiece. If all the cases have to be dropped, it will cost the government $300 million.

Worse yet, Rostenkowski's bailout means that two taxpayers who arranged virtually identical commodity deals to avoid paying taxes will be treated differently.

Ordinary investors will have to show they were trying to make money, not simply create losses to claim as tax deductions. But thanks to Rostenkowski, "professional commodity traders and persons who regularly trade commodity futures contracts" will be presumed to have a profit motive.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

In many cases that distinction will mean the brokers who invented this tax dodge will get away with using it, but their clients will have to pay taxes.

The transactions at issue are so transparently designed only to avoid taxes that the IRS has won virtually every case it has taken to court challenging the deals known as "commodity tax straddles."

It takes a legal brief and a couple of charts to explain the details of even a simple straddle, but the basic idea is easy: At the end of the year you set up two parallel deals by simultaneously buying and selling commodity futures contracts. On one deal you will make money; on the other you will lose about the same amount. You do the losing deal in December and claim your losses on this year's taxes. You complete the profitable deal in January and recover all the money you lost. Of course you owe taxes on your January profits, but if you repeat the straddle every year, you can avoid paying indefinitely.

Structuring the straddle so you don't lose more money than you want to and are sure to regain your profits is not easy, but Chicago commodity traders long ago mastered a virtually foolproof method known as the butterfly straddle.

The IRS caught wind of it and in 1977 issued a ruling casting doubt on all straddle deductions. In 1981 Congress closed the loophole tighter by requiring investors to report their December losses and their January profits as one transaction—whose net tax effect was zero.

By that time, the IRS had begun targeting returns claiming large commodity trading losses, turning up billions of dollars of dubious deductions. Pending in tax court are $2 billion worth of straddle cases—$300 million against professional traders, the remainder from their clients.

One by one, the IRS has taken the taxpayers to court and ordered them to prove the commodity trades where made with a profit motive or pay up. Only last week Tax Court Judge Arthur Nims gave the government another major victory by ruling there was no profit motive in government securities investments arranged by a tax shelter promoter.

But while Judge Nims was nailing the barn door shut, Rostenkowski opened the way for the professional traders to escape without paying.

The tax committee's actions dismayed and demoralized government attorneys who spent years building their case against commodity tax cheating only to have their efforts destroyed by a political fix.

There is no doubt that Rostenkowski's amendment is a fix, but it is a legal fix. The way the game is played in Washington, you can do anything you want for your friend as long as you don't get caught taking a briefcase full of cash. Campaign contributions don't count.

Campaign cash routinely flows to influential tax writers from Chicago commodity traders. Local boy Rostenkowski gets their money even when he has no serious opposition. Ways and Means member Marty Russo—another Illinois Democrat—is among the industry's leading advocates in the House. Democratic fund raiser Tony Coelho cultivates the Chicago crowd like prize tomato plants.

And this was a bipartisan fix. Bob Dole—representing Senate Republicans in the smoke-filled room—endorsed the bailout. Illinois Republican Sen. Charles Percy—running scared in his reelection campaign—gladly carried water for the mistreated millionaires among his constituents.

To their credit, Reagan administration representatives from the Treasury objected to the fix. But with a multibillion-dollar deficit bill at stake, they could not afford to publicly challenge the powerful committee chairmen over a pet loophole.

The commodity straddle fix is an indictment not only of the people who pass tax laws but also of the entire tax-writing process. So long as tax laws are drafted in midnight madness, these sordid little paragraphs will proliferate like Steven Spielberg's Gremlins. Shake some money on them and they multiply.

The incident also is an embarrassing example of the way the press covers the legislative process. The $300 million fix was reported as routine tax-writing by most media, including this newspaper. Only the Wall Street Journal warned in advance of the raid on the Treasury, and committee aides assured other reporters the warnings were needless because the provision would not be included. The New York Times decided the news was not fit to print, treating it not as a scandal but as a joke about "commodes" and "twaddle" on its Washington Talk page. Twaddle indeed.●

A TRIBUTE TO MAINE EAGLE SCOUTS

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in honoring Scott Bolduc, from Troop 312 in North Berwick, and Prem Thomas from Troop 124 in Lisbon, both of whom have been chosen to receive the coveted Eagle Scout Award.

Scott Bolduc, the son of Dale and Dolly Bolduc of North Berwick, became a Scout in November 1979. Since that date, Scott has worked his way from the rank of Tenderfoot to the rank of Life. He finished his Eagle Scout project this past February. This project established child identification folders for each child residing in North Berwick, from kindergarten to grade six. This study included dental, medical, and fingerprint charts. Scott, with the aid of North Berwick police, spent many hours fingerprinting and gathering information to attain his goal.

Scott is also active in soccer, baseball, band, show choir, and the barbershop quartet at Noble High School. He is a member of the National Junior High Honor Society, and is a deacon in the First Congregational Church in North Berwick.

Prem, the son of Rev. C.V. and Jessy Thomas of Lewiston, maintains a high honors average at Philips Academy in Andover, MA. While ranking among the top five students in his class, Prem is also on the academy's swim team. He began his Scouting career 5 years ago. In 1979, he was Scout of the Year for his troop. He is a member of Order of the Arrow, and has earned his Boy Scout life guard medal.

I would like to commend the parents, Scout leaders, and friends of these two young men for encouraging them in their pursuit of excellence. I wish to congratulate Scott and Prem and wish them continued success in the future.●

DON'T NEGLECT THE PORTS

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, as you will recall, just prior to recessing for the Independence Day/Democratic National Convention district work period, the House overwhelmingly adopted H.R. 3678, the Water Resources, Conservation, Development, and Infrastructure Improvement and Rehabilitation Act of 1983.

In light of the fact that the Congress has not adopted a comparable water development bill since 1970, it is important that the Senate quickly follow the House's lead on this matter.

Unfortunately, I continue to read reports that the administration—for various reasons—is strongly opposed to H.R. 3678 and is hardly thrilled with the Senate's omnibus water development bill.

We all know that time is rapidly running out on this 98th Congress. Thus, it is imperative that the President and his key advisors end talk of vetoing H.R. 3678—or a comparable measure—and, instead, concentrate their efforts on getting a water development bill out of the Senate.

If a water development bill is not signed into law by the President this year, it would be another serious blow to our Nation's ports. Even though our foreign trade is at record levels, the President has so far refused to make the commitment that is needed to develop our ports allowing them to accept a new generation of containerships. And, it goes without saying that the U.S. Customs Service collects billions of dollars annually in duties, taxes, and fees from commercial cargo arriving in our ports.

In short, our ports produce tremendous revenue for the Treasury, provide millions of jobs, and promote our national defense. It is in the Nation's best interest that the Federal Government renew its longstanding commitment to port development and improvement. An excellent editorial which appeared in the July 10, 1984 edition of the Journal of Commerce on this important topic follows. I urge all of my colleagues to read it.

DON'T NEGLECT THE PORTS

The U.S. House of Representatives made commendable progress late last month when it overwhelmingly passed a long-delayed and badly needed port development bill.

Unfortunately, a bill with the same goal (but a somewhat different path) is stalled in the Senate Finance Committee because backers fear amendments attached to it will kill it.

And the White House, departing drastically from its advocacy of increased trade opportunities for the United States, is staunchly opposed to the House bill and hardly thrilled with the Senate version.

So it looks now as if port development will be put back on the shelf it has occupied for a decade or more—while the dredging problems of the nation's ports continue to fester. It is a true pity—and a real danger.

The steady growth of the United States into a world power was fueled by commerce. Throughout America's history, the federal government realized that it was in the nation's interest to accept responsibility for developing and maintaining the nation's navigable waters—deepening, widening, extending and maintaining the channels that allow merchant ships to use the ports.

Because of disputes, politicking and tight finances, port development languished during the 1970s. The list of unfinished projects and proposals that were authorized but not funded swelled past the $50-billion mark.

Then Mr. Reagan took over as president and brought with him a new concept: that ocean commerce mainly benefits those involved in it, and that those involved thus should pay for the cost of federal services like port development through some form of user fees.

The legistative efforts and battles that resulted eventually spawned a bill authored by Rep. Robert A. Roe, D-N.J., which basically would use U.S. Customs revenues to pay for full construction and maintenance of channels under 45 feet deep and half the cost of work on big port's 45-foot and deeper channels; and the one authored by Sen. James Abdnor, R-S.D., which makes much greater use of user fees. The former was passed by the House 259-33; the latter is bottled up in committee.

Now, the pundits say, with barely two months left to this session of Congress there is little likelihood of the Senate bill being passed, the differences between it and the Roe bill being ironed out by a conference committee, and a threatened veto avoided.

Meanwhile, however, the international ocean-shipping industry is moving forward with a new generation of containerships that offer new economics of scale, a generation that's sure to grow in number just as it ships have increased greatly in size over those that until now have represented the norm.

There's only one problem: the ships are so big, U.S. ports will have difficulty handling them—to say the least—without new dredging.

It is ironic that an administration that claims to be so devoted to the economics of trade is so blind to the mechanics of trade. Indeed, one would think that an administration that wants to increase trade would be willing to support the cost of the physical work needed to handle increased trade.

Unfortunately, that doesn't appear to be the case. Nor does all of Congress appear able to accept the need for port-development resolution and act. And that's not only too bad, it's downright dangerous economically.

Just as the primary users of the nation's port facilities aren't the only ones to benefit from them, neither will the primary users be the only ones hurt when those facilities are allowed to languish in neglect. Someone else will hurt, too, as the limited size of American ports hampers American trade with the world: the nation.●

NATIONAL CHEESEBURGER WEEK

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution proclaiming the week of October 7-13, 1984 as "National Cheeseburger Week" in honor of the 50th anniversary of the creation of the cheeseburger.

I have offered this resolution because the cheeseburger was "created" in October 1934 at Kaelin's Restaurant in my hometown of Louisville, KY. My family and I ate often at Kaelin's over the years and always cheeseburgers were the main fare.

Today cheeseburgers are as much a part of American tradition as baseball, hot dogs, and apple pie. Cheeseburgers go with families and picnics and barbeques. Cheeseburgers are a part of our daily vocabulary, and they provide a well-balanced and inexpensive meal in this era of eating on the run.

I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this resolution.●

NEW MERGER GUIDELINES

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the Justice Department on its efforts to revise the merger guidelines so that they more accurately reflect current international market conditions. By reviewing the provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, the Justice Department has created new merger guidelines that will help boost the international competitive posture of domestic industries while retaining the original nature of those acts, which were designed to protect consumers from anticompetitive behavior. The review of these two basic antitrust laws, which are 94 and 70 years old respectively, is a necessary and important step toward the creation of a legal climate which promotes competition and innovation.

Our domestic industry is faced with economic competition that is both assertive and inventive. Alexander Trowbridge of the National Association of Manufacturers has stated that roughly 70 percent of everything we make in this country must compete with foreign products, adding that our high tech industry, which now accounts for nearly 44 percent of manufactured exports, is especially susceptible to foreign market innovation. In light of this pressure on our domestic industry, I admire the efforts of the Justice Department to clarify the treatment of foreign competition in merger analysis.

J. Paul McGrath, in his remarks before the New York Roundtable, stated that the Justice Department will not include existing imports in defining markets and calculating the Herfindahl Indices, and also will consider the effects of such trade restraints as a separate factor in interpreting the significance of market concentration and market share data.

I applaud the work of J. Paul McGrath and the Justice Department in a time when our domestic industries are under fire from foreign competition. Furthermore, I encourage and support additional work that will continue to take strides toward improved domestic competition.●

TERRORISM AT THE GAMES

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, according to the Soviets, their decision to withdraw from the Olympic games this summer in Los Angeles was based on their concern over inadequate security measures. Many in this country have since speculated that their decision may, in fact, have been based more on political motivations than anything else. Perhaps they were willing to sacrifice the glory of the Olympics in order to damage President Reagan's reelection chances this fall. Or maybe they were still fuming over President Carter's 1980 boycott. These and many other reasons have been suggested to explain their rather flimsy excuse of "security threats" to their Olympic contingent. Interestingly enough, they have continued to send teams to this country to participate in other sporting events.

But in a recent editorial, Mr. Emanuel Winston raises another, much more sinister possible reason for the Soviet boycott. It may be that the Soviets are aware of some imminent terrorist activity that will take place at the games. It may even be that they are behind the activities of some terrorist group. Either way, they will be pleased with the results. Their athletes will be safely at home, and their boycott will apparently be justified.

We need to be aware of this possibility and prepare accordingly. If we do not, we can be sure that attempts will be made to disrupt the games, and the results might very well be tragic. The Olympics pose an almost irresistible target to a terrorist, and the Soviets, of course, have been in the terrorist business long enough to know that. I hope each of you will take a few moments and read Mr. Winston's timely thoughts on this matter.

[From the Chicago Sun-Times, July 3, 1984]

TERRORISM THREAT HANGS OVER GAMES

(By Emanuel A. Winston)

The Soviet decision to withdraw from the Summer Olympics was certainly not rash and was undoubtedly the result of months of contemplation by the Communist Party leadership. The Soviets simply do not act in haste; thus, such a decisive action must have been planned long ago.

Soviet athletes have been participating in Western competitions for years and have never reacted in such a manner to security arrangements. True, fear of defections and steroid detections are real concerns but are problems with which the Soviets could contend.

Other answers to the boycott include retaliation for the American 1980 boycott, and to put political pressure on Ronald Reagan and diminish his chances for reelection in November.

However, the sacrifice of abandoning the Olympic quest seems to be too great for them to act upon that reasoning. Enter another hypothetical explaining withdrawal: the prospect of a major act of terrorism at the Los Angeles Games.

Indeed, the Olympics afford the terrorist a most sought after world showcase to inflict violence and create hysteria. The pathological personality searches for public events to call attention to their "causes."

Similarly, extremist mentalities such as those Iranians who occupied the U.S. Embassy or the Moslem fanatics who engage in kamikaze terrorist acts are likely suspects for wanton exploitation of the Games.

But aside from the "crazies" who are a real threat because of their irrational and perfidious behavior, Olympic security will have to prepare for an even greater peril; organized international terrorism. This also may be the ultimate reason for Soviet withdrawal.

Five years ago. Sen. Henry Jackson summed up the Soviet role in international terror: "While there is still debate over the extent to which the Soviet government, either directly or through its allies and satellites exercises central control over certain terrorist organizations, the view of the majority is that Soviet bloc weapons constitute an important element in the scale and success of terrorism.

"Whatever the ideological or nationalistic aspirations of individual terrorist groups, they have a common interest, which they share with the Soviet Union, in destroying the fabric of democratic, lawful societies all over the world."

Since Jackson made this analysis, the State Department has released intelligence data that confirms Soviet support for large-scale terrorist activities in Latin America and the Mideast. The Israeli invasion of Lebanon also uncovered an elaborate training network in which terrorists from all over the globe receive instruction from Soviet advisers on demolitions and weapons.

The Soviet Ministry of Defense even awarded Palestine Liberation Organization terrorists graduation certificates after they completed training at camps in the U.S.S.R.

Terrorists also received training in Bulgaria, Vietnam, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and other communist bloc satellites. In short, incontrovertible proof has been supplied to link Soviet control over terrorism in what Clauswitz would term as an instrument of policy.

The Soviets constantly test and probe the United States for strategic and political opportunities. They have succeeded in masking their covert role in terror and they are probably surprised at the lack of effective reactions from the Free World to their activities.

The disgust over the downing of the KAL 007 civilian aircraft was shortlived. It is hardly mentioned anymore. Similarly, the Soviet role on the attack on the pope was played down despite the fact Mahmet Ali Agca admitted he cooperated with the Bulgarian secret police and received training in a PLO course.

The Soviets have also escaped criticism over their connections and support of the Red Brigades, Sandanistas, IRA and the terrorist Islamic groups who with Syrian (a Soviet proxy) support attacked the Marine compound and murdered 241 Americans with impunity.

The reasons for the communist bloc having escaped an uproar over the use of terrorist measures is twofold: the West is simply reluctant to confront the U.S.S.R. in the name of detente.

The killer of Lord Mountbatten got Soviet training in Libya, and terrorists worldwide boast of their relationship with the communists, yet there is the myopic belief by the majority that to call a spade a spade will only exacerbate superpower relations.

Against the backdrop of Soviet behavior and motives, it is logical to conclude the Kremlin may have knowledge of a major terrorist operation planned for the Olympics.

They may wish to undermine the U.S. claim for adequate security, but it is much more likely that they pulled out to lift the restraints of several of the many organizations who have been planning incidents at the Games.

Although the Soviets are the major sponsors for terrorism, they are not in complete control of the activities of the individual groups. Moslem fanatics or the Puerto Rican FALN have in the past acted on their own. But perhaps the most likely suspects are the Libyans.

Last November, the State Department indicated it had evidence of a plot by Moammar Khadafy to assassinate the president, vice president and the secretaries of defense and state. Khadafy has made no secret about his vendetta for the United States and threatened war on our 6th Fleet after the Gulf of Sidra incident in 1981 where American planes downed Libyan fighters in a short-lived dogfight.

Now, with the announcement of Libyan hit squads sent across the globe to eliminate dissenters, the United States will have to increase its surveillance on those extremists.

In a worst-case scenario, it could be that the Soviets have knowledge of a planned nuclear or biological act of terror.

However, despite all the precautions and comprehensive arrangements, it is almost impossible to prevent a few individuals from carrying out an act of sabotage with sophisticated weaponry capable of massive destruction.

In a nutshell, a terrorist attack upon the Olympics may be a component of the general offensive against the West described by KGB defector "Maj. Korolyuk" in 1981 to West German debriefers.

The Soviets are aware that they can escape direct responsibility and they have proved that inciting domestic hysteria and fomenting instability are successful means of influencing events. The U.S. capitulation to Syrian-Soviet sponsored terrorism in Lebanon and the growing trend torward American isolationism, even in our own backyard, lend credence to their strategy.

Whatever the true motivations of the Soviet Union for boycotting the Olympics, the United States must react to the nefarious behavior of the Soviet leadership that has for the most part gone unchecked.

The Free World must take a united stance against state-supported terrorism or live with the dangerous consequences of even wider spread cowardly violence.

Andrei Sakharov, in a letter smuggled to the New York Times several years ago, instructed us on this notion: "The world is facing very critical times and cruel cataclysms because the West and developing countries do not show the required firmness, unity and consistency in resisting the totalitarian challenge. . . . It is critically important that the common danger be fully understood and then everything else will fall into place."

Perhaps the Soviet decision to abandon the Games will be conducive to a Western attitude of coherent circumspection. It is time to pay heed to Sakharov's words and recognize our worst fears for the Los Angeles Olympic Games.●

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. FRANK ANNUNZIO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the 26th annual observance of Capitive Nations Week and to remind the world of the many nations suffering under the burdensome oppression of the Soviet Union. During Captive Nations Week we take time to reflect on the many freedoms and liberties that we in America often take for granted, and to rededicate ourselves to the support of those millions living in captive nations who can only dream about the day when they too will know freedom.

On several recent occasions, we have been painfully reminded of the little regard that the Soviet Union holds for human rights. The culmination of Communist atrocities occurred in September 1983 when the Soviet Union shot out of the sky a Korean jetliner, killing 269 innocent victims, including a Member of Congress.

More recently, the Soviet Union decided to boycott the 1984 summer Olympic games in Los Angeles. The athletes from the Soviet Union, and from many other captive nations who have been forced to go along with this boycott, have been deprived of one of the few opportunities to express themselves by competing against other athletes of the world. This is only because the Kremlin fears that their own athletes may choose to defect, after experiencing a taste of freedom in this country.

In the 26 years since President Eisenhower first designated the third week in July as Captive Nations Week, although the Communists have been ruthless in their attempts to destroy the culture, the national identity, and the religion of the many peoples of the captive nations, their individuality remains, and their desire to achieve self-determination continues. A list of the captive nations follows:

Established captive nations list (CNL), country, people, and year of Communist domination

[1] Countries absorbed into U.S.S.R.

So long as the heroic people of the captive nations are committed to the principles of freedom and self-determination, the spark of liberty will be kept alive, and one day those nations under the captivity of the Communists will be able to throw off their chains of bondage and become free. During Captive Nations Week, millions of Americans who trace their origin to these Captive Nations, and to other lands, join in reflection and prayer, to express their support for policies which will free these captive nations.

At this point in the RECORD, I would like to incude the President's Captive Nations Week Proclamation.

The proclamation follows:

[From the Federal Register, July 18, 1984]

PRESIDENTIAL DOCUMENTS, PROCLAMATION 5223 OF JULY 16, 1984 CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK, 1984

(By the President of the United States of America)

A PROCLAMATION

Once each year, all Americans are asked to pause and to remember that their liberties and freedoms, often taken for granted, are forbidden to many nations around the world. America continues to be dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. If we are to sustain our commitment to this principle, we must recognize that the peoples of the Captive Nations are endowed by the Creator with the same rights to give their consent as to who shall govern them as those of us who are privileged to live in Freedom. For those captive and oppressed peoples, the United States of America stands as a symbol of hope and inspiration. This leadership requires faithfulness toward our own democratic principles as well as a commitment to speak out in defense of mankind's natural rights.

Though twenty-five years have passed since the original designation of Captive Nations Week, its significance has not diminished. Rather, it has undeniably increased—especially as other nations have fallen under Communist domination. During Captive Nations Week we must take time to remember both the countless victims and the lonely heroes; both the targets of carpet bombing in Afghanistan, and individuals such as imprisoned Ukrainian patriot Yuriy Shukhevych. We must draw strength from the actions of the millions of freedom fighters in Communist-occupied countries, such as the signers of petitions for religious rights in Lithuania, or the members of Solidarity, whose public protests require personal risk and sacrifice that is almost incomprehensible to the average citizen in the Free World. It is in their struggle for freedom that we can find the true path to genuine and lasting peace.

For those denied the benefits of liberty we shall continue to speak out for their freedom. On behalf of the unjustly persecuted and falsely imprisoned, we shall continue to call for their speedy release and offer our prayers during their suffering. On behalf of the brave men and women who suffer persecution because of national origin, religious beliefs, and their desire for liberty, it is the duty and the privilege of the United States of America to demand that the signatories of the United Nations Charter and the Helsinki Accords live up to their pledges and obligations and respect the principles and spirit of those international agreements and understandings.

During Captive Nations Week, we renew our efforts to encourage freedom, independence, and national self-determination for those countries struggling to free themselves from Communist ideology and totalitarian oppression, and to support those countries which today are standing face-to-face against Soviet expansionism. One cannot call for freedom and human rights for the people of Asia and Eastern Europe while ignoring the struggles of our own neighbors in this hemisphere. There is no difference between the weapons used to oppress the people of Laos and Czechoslovakia, and those sent to Nicaragua to terrorize its own people and threaten the peace and prosperity of its neighbors.

The Congress, by joint resolution approved July 17, 1959 (73 Stat. 212), has authorized and requested the President to designate the third week in July as "Captive Nations Week."

Now, Therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the week beginning July 15, 1984, as Captive Nations Week. I invite the people of the United States to observe this week with appropriate ceremonies and activities toi reaffirm their dedication to the international principles of justice and freedom, which unite us and inspire others.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 16th day of July, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and ninth.

RONALD REAGAN.

Mr. Speaker, we must continue to condemn the Soviet Union for its numerous human rights violations, and we must renew our efforts on behalf of millions of men, women, and children, enslaved against their will, in order that they may obtain the freedoms that are rightfully theirs. On the occasion of the 26th observance of Captive Nations Week, I am proud to join with my constituents in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and all Americans, in praying that one day the courageous people who suffer under Communist totalitarianism will know the blessings of self-determination and a free homeland. As the strongest democracy in the world, we must set the example, and increase our efforts, to combat Communist oppression wherever it appears on this Earth, and to work toward that day when the captive nations can join their rightful place among free nations of the world.●

A GREAT AMERICAN FAMILY

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have in my congressional district the family of Bob and Myriam Wolf. The Wolfs were recently honored as a "Great American Family."

Only nine families across the United States were chosen to receive this award. On June 27, the Wolf family came to Washington to be honored at the White House by First Lady Nancy Reagan, who chaired the award program.

I was particularly pleased to have the youngest of the Wolf children, Ken, as an LBJ intern during the month of June. A few years ago, the eldest, Caryn, was also a summer intern in our office.

The Wolf family is a family dedicated to community service, and I believe their record of service leaves no doubt as to their deserving this award. The following articles will tell my colleagues more about this remarkable family:

[From the Miami Herald, May 24, 1984]

FAMILIAL BLISS: NMB CLAN RECEIVES BIG HONOR

(By Keith L. Thomas)

It's all in the family, especially for Dr. Robert and Myriam Wolf of North Miami Beach.

The entire Wolf clan will be honored by First Lady Nancy Reagan as one of the "Great American Families," June 27 at the White House.

"It's really exciting," Mrs. Wolf said Monday.

Some 200 families around the country were nominated for the honor, said K. Wayne Scott, president of the American Family Society and program coordinator.

Nine families were chosen winners. The Wolfs were selected for their family teamwork and community service.

They are best known as leaders and developers of a community support system that enables mentally handicapped adults to live as independently as possible in the community.

"Our work has involved our entire family," Mrs. Wolf said. She said their four children, Caryn, Eric, Joanne, Kenneth and son-in-law Tony all have worked hard.

It was the Wolf's 24-year-old son, Eric, a victim of cerebral palsy, who inspired the family to start the Association for the Advancement of the Mentally Handicapped six years ago. The association has provided help and service to the mentally handicapped for three years.

"The nine Great American Families are representative of all the truly outstanding single-parent, two-parent, foster and adoptive families in this country," Scott said.

[From the Miami News, May 18, 1984]

DADE "GREAT AMERICAN FAMILY" SPOTLIGHTED

(By Adrienne Sylver)

The Wolf family is great and they can prove it. The North Miami Beach family has been chosen from about 200 families nationwide as a "great American family" in the second annual award program, chaired by First Lady Nancy Reagan.

Bob and Myriam Wolf and their four children will travel to Washington June 27 to accept their award at a White House ceremony. Eight other families around the country will also receive the honors, said Mary Ann Beahon, director of community relations for United Family and Children Services in Miami.

Bob, Myriam, Ken, Jody, Eric and Caryn have all worked over the years establishing support groups for the handicapped; Eric is mentally handicapped. They also help raise funds for other families.

"We all stuck together, worked together and acted as a support group for each other," said Bob, a Hialeah dentist. "Families must remember that their own family is the biggest most supportive group they can have. And we've always been good communicators."

[From the Miami Herald]

ERIC'S HANDICAP IS FAMILY'S BOND

(By Ellen Livingston)

The kids are all grown and gone, now. Caryn, 25, is married, Ken, 19, and Jody, 21, are away at college and Eric, 24, just moved into a house in Hollywood. But they're still a traditional family, say Bob and Myriam Wolf: There will always be ties that bind.

The Wolf family's strongest bond is Eric, their mentally handicapped son. Eric is the reason all the Wolf children spent the better part of their December vacations making checklists and packing furniture for a brother about to move into his own home for the first time.

Eric is the reason Ken helped develop a newspaper for handicapped adults while he was at North Miami Beach High School, and helped organize a peer-support group for students with handicapped siblings in his freshman year at Brandeis University.

But most of all, Eric is the reason Bob and Myriam Wolf of North Miami Beach have spent the past five years working to establish a Dade County chapter of the Association for the Advancement of the Mentally Handicapped (AAMH).

The amazing thing about the Wolfs, say friends and associates, is that they've taken the kind of situation that wrenches most families apart and turned it into a benefit not only for themselves, but for the community at large.

Not that it's been an easy path. There were times when the kids were growing up that they resented Eric for the extra attention he got, says Myriam, 47. When Eric was a child, the parents turned the special gym equipment he needed into a family play center with all the children and their friends invited to play along—and help the therapy.

And then there was the decision to "go public" with AAMH: "We're very private people. We agonized over that. We could have done just what we needed to do for Eric alone. But we didn't want him just functioning in a vacuum."

When Eric came home after four years of boarding school in 1978, the Wolfs realized that there are few resources for high-functioning handicapped adults. But instead of looking for a place for Eric alone, they decided to take on everyone else who was in the same boat.

So the first weekend Eric was home, they organized a social club that has been going strong ever since. When Bob Wolf read about an AAMH group in New Jersey, he knew he had found the answer.

Wolf convinced the group's director, Arthur Rittmaster Jr., to give a seminar at Barry University. Bob and Myriam, who manages her husband's Hialeah office, used the publicity techniques they had mastered in their years of work for Soviet Jewry to ensure that the meeting was a success.

The Wolfs would much rather talk about AAMH's accomplishments than their own. They've just helped four clients, including Eric, move into apartments of their own. Another client, Debbie Phillips, 30, not only lives on her own, but as a steady job and plans to get married in May.

Helping people like Debbie and Eric live their own lives benefits their families as well, says Myriam Wolf. Too often, she says, the strain of caring for a handicapped family member breeds resentment. Helping them gain independence fosters love.

"I was very aware of it in December," she says, recalling when the whole family was together. "I was just glowing. They love each other and are really interested in each other. They're good friends."●

JUDGE MILES LORD STRIKES A BLOW FOR COMMON DECENCY

HON. DAVID R. OBEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, on February 29 Federal District Court Judge Miles W. Lord, in a case involving a product liability against the A.H. Robins Co., delivered from the bench an eloquent statement about the necessity for corporations in this society to meet their moral as well as bottom-line business obligations.

Apparently angered by the judge's statement, the company has since sought an official reprimand of Judge Lord before a five-judge investigative panel. Apparently, the Robins Co. seeks to have his statement in effect stricken from the record. They would evidently like to have the judge's conduct punished and the judge's comments suppressed in much the same manner that they would undoubtedly like to see suppressed the publicity about the harm that their Dalkon Shield intrauterine device has apparently caused to so many women.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Judiciary should not be censuring Judge Lord—it should be giving him a medal. He is one of too few jurists in this country with enough guts to consistently demonstrate fairness, morality, and legality in our judicial system.

In his remarks, Judge Lord appealed to the decency of Robins executives, asking them to help seek out those women still using the intrauterine device so that they may be spared the agony so many others have already endured. Nearly 3 million Dalkon Shields were originally sold. More than 6,700 claims have been settled so far, and another 3,000 lawsuits are pending.

Judge Lord's statement should serve both as a guide for our actions and as an example of the standards that should be followed by decent people in this society.

I am proud of Judge Lord and would hope that all of my colleagues will carefully consider the very fitting and moral statement he made from the bench to executives of the A.H. Robins Co.

I am inserting the full text of Judge Lord's comments in the RECORD so that regardless of the company's intentions, a small piece of the public record will contain the judge's on-the-button comments about the obligation that all of us have to each other in this society.

In a moral society it is not enough for companies to make economic decisions solely on the basis of business judgements. There is an obligation to do more than that in both public life and in the private business world.

That is what Judge Lord's statment is all about and that is why it belongs in the public's record—the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the proceedings in the Congress of the United States.

The material follows:

SPEECH TO E.C. ROBINS, JR., WILLIAM FORREST, AND DR. LUNSFORD

Mr. Robins Jr., Mr. Forrest and Dr. Lunsford: After months of reflection, study and cogitation—and no small amount of prayer—I have concluded it perfectly appropriate to make to you this statement, which will constitute my plea to you to seek new horizons in corporate consciousness and a new sense of personal responsibility for the activities of those who work under you in the name of the A.H. Robins Company.

It is not enough to say, "I did not know," "It was not me," "Look elsewhere." Time and time again, each of you has used this kind of argument in refusing to acknowledge your responsibility and in pretending to the world that the chief officers and the directors of your gigantic multinational corporation have no responsibility for the company's acts and omissions.

In a speech I gave several years ago, (In the document which I have just asked you to read,) I suggested to the hundreds of ministers of the gospel who constitute the Minnesota Council of Churches that the accumulation of corporate wrongs is in my mind a manifestation of individual sin.

You, Mr. Robins Jr., have been heard to boast many times that the growth and prosperity of this company is a direct result of its having been in the Robins family for three generations. The stamp of the Robins family is upon it. The corporation is built in the image of the Robins mentality.

You, Dr. Lunsford, as director of the company's most sensitive and important subdivision, have violated every ethical precept to which every doctor under your supervision must pledge as he gives the oath of Hippocrates and assumes the mantle of one who would help and cure and nuture unto the physical needs of the populace.

You, Mr. Forrest, are a lawyer, one who upon finding his client in trouble should counsel and guide him along a course which will comport with the legal, moral and ethical principles which must bind us all. You have not brought honor to your profession, Mr. Forrest.

Gentlemen, the results of these activities and attitudes on your part have been catastrophic. Today as you sit here attempting once more to extricate yourselves from the legal consequences of your acts, none of you has faced up to the fact that more than 9,000 women have made claims that they gave up part of their womanhood so that your company might prosper. It is alleged that others gave their lives so you might so prosper. And there stand behind them legions more who have been injured but who have not sought relief in the courts of this land.

I dread to think what would have been the consequences if your victims had been men rather than women, women who seem through some strange quirk of our society's mores to be expected to suffer pain, shame and humiliation.

If one poor young man were by some act of this—without authority or consent—to inflict such damage upon one woman, he would be jailed for a good portion of the rest of his life. And yet your company, without warning to women, invaded their bodies by the millions and caused them injuries by the thousands. And when the time came for these women to make their claims against your company, you attacked their characters. You inquired into their sexual practices and into the identity of their sex partners. You exposed these women—and ruined families and reputations and careers—in order to intimidate those who would raise their voices against you.
